ODDLY ENOUGH

by WALDMAN

A bright firm a few years ago hit on the idea of bottling fresh lemon juice for convenience and economy—then they hit on a second idea that was even more striking. They packed the Realemon juice in a plastic container—that looked like a lemon, even felt like a lemon. It worked with a squeeze—to produce a few drops or a tablespoon-full quickly and easily. Then things happened!

One man wrote in to say the empty lemon container, tightly sealed, was the best fish-bobber he ever used. Its bright color makes it easy to see—even after sundown, he notes!

A clever housewife wrote to say she found the empty container, with the top cut off, a colorful planter for artificial flowers. Another wrote that she was saving them up for outdoor Christmas tree ornaments—colorful, festive—and unbreakable.

Another ingenious lady wrote to say she found the "lemons" made unusual party favors—paper bird heads could be fashioned and inserted into the necks of the plastic lemons. Gay and amusing!

Suggestions continue to pour in for the plastic lemon—ranging from clothes sprinklers to harmless squirt guns. In fact, say company officials, people seem obsessed with creating uses for the container, other than the hundreds of uses for lemon juice itself!

From my front porch

By CARL HELM

A reader who, as myself, was incarcerated for years in a stone-walled, grassless city, writes that he, too, likes to see grass growing between occasional cracks in sidewalks in his hometown.

I'll bet there may be hundreds of such strange characters as we—perhaps even a Mrs. or two of the fussy type who can't abide even a spot of comfortable dust around the house...

'Comfortable' dust, I said. Show me a house that doesn't have a smidge of clean, honest dust in it, and I'll prove (to myself, anyway) that it isn't a comfortable house where a man can sprawl out with his pipe and his newspaper, or munch an apple in calm male content!

"If I saw just the good in you
"And you the good in me,
"Perhaps within a day or two
"We'd find a remedy
"For all distrust—suspicion,
"too:
"And we'd quite friendly be—
"If I saw just the good in you,
"And you the good in me!"

INCREASE SHOWN IN AUTOMOBILE INJURIES

Traffic accidents in Oregon sent to hospitals more than nine people a day during July, the Department of Motor Vehicles reported.

The monthly breakdown showed that 286 people were injured to the extent that they had to be carried from the scene of the crash with bleeding wounds or distorted members.

Another 552 people received other visible injuries, such as bruises, abrasions, swelling and limping; and 358 people complained of pain without visible signs of injury, or momentary unconsciousness.

The department said injuries so far this year are running ahead of last year, despite the fact that total accidents and deaths are down. During the same period a year ago 9,057 people had been injured. Through July this year 9,659 were injured in traffic accidents.
