

The Oregon Democrat said the report revealed that in the Pacific Northwest over 1 billion board ft. of planned timber sales have been held up due to lack of rights of way and access roads. In addition he said the report points out that the Forest Service does not have a sufficient amount of timber in preparation for sale or under contract. Neuberger said the staff study explains that while a large part of this problem stems from inadequate budget requests by the administration, there is also a need for an improved timber marketing set-up by the Forest Service.

The Oregon Senator said the study revealed that in the Pacific Northwest 70 percent of the National Forest Timber under contract was held by 52 firms, or about 16 percent of those firms holding Forest Service contracts. The report also showed that the amount of timber cut by the industry has remained almost constant over the last few years while the Forest Service has sold more timber than the industry cut.

The Oregon Senator said that he plans to confer with Senator James E. Murray, chairman of the State Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and other Western Senators when he returns to Washington.
