NOT DEAD. BY AGNES L. STEVENS. In the full belief of the immortality of the soul I dedicate this poem in fond memories to my beloved sister, Caroline B. Showers, deceased, Jan. 13, 1895, at Forest Grove, Oregon.

Not dead, No. Thonart, and wert, and shalt be, A spirit of love through all eternity, And, as my lowly thoughts thro' thee soar, I hear thy gentle voice, And see thy loving face once more.

Not dead, No. I saw thy spirit take its flight, And mount its wings of glory, While, through the ether bright, You soared away like an uncaged dove, Into the realms of light.

NOT DEAD.

Not dead, No. The good, the great eternal one, Who rules the earth and sun, Has guided you safe home.

Not dead, No. The light shall ever shine, I seek thy presence ever thus, The effulgence of thy light to guide My footsteps home beyond the tide.

Not dead, No. Could a life like thine forever die, And leave no trace of immortality? Could thy star go down to rise no more? Could thy spirit bright forget to soar? Can the mother forget the young on her breast? Can the eternal one forget his best? As he has not forgot the son, The stars and moon to him as one, So he has not forgot his own, And so thy he has guided home.

Not dead, No. So from the realms of endless bliss, I seek thy presence ever thus, The effulgence of thy light to guide My footsteps home beyond the tide.

Not dead, No. The old sprinkler had its tank re-caulked and a new spout put on last week and early Monday morning it was drawn from its place behind the HATCHET building, but not before an oak tree which stood in its way was cut down and a large boulder rolled away.

Forest Grove Water Works. The old sprinkler had its tank re-caulked and a new spout put on last week and early Monday morning it was drawn from its place behind the HATCHET building, but not before an oak tree which stood in its way was cut down and a large boulder rolled away.
