"Annotations for the Constitution and Codes of Washington, annotated and arranged by Jess. R. Caples, attorney at law, Portland, Or." has just been published. It is a neat pamphlet of twenty odd pages whose closely printed columns show a vast amount of labor and research has been given to them in the compilation.

The HATCHET Printery has a new job press. It came on Wednesday's train. As it weighs 1670 lbs. it required some effort to move it to its new quarters but it is now in the Printery and will soon be placed in position on the stone pier prepared for it and be ready for work. The machine is the latest made, technically known as a California Reliable style C, and on it can be done the finest work. One device enables it to print in eight colors at one impression. With a new press, new type and new ideas the HATCHET Printery is the place to get printing done in the best style. The cost is no more, often less, than at other places.

Mr. Blaker will move about August 1 into the corner store below Hughes & Son's hardware store, corner of Pacific avenue and Third street. The store will be fitted up and with the increased room Mr. Blaker will be enabled to carry a larger stock, giving greater variety from which to choose. His business has been increasing ever since he started in here until now it is so large the present quarters are entirely inadequate to accommodate it. Mr. Blaker claims to handle second hand furniture but the goods have been so little used generally and have all been thoroughly overhauled before being placed on sale that they might easily be disposed of as new. The prices though are far below the cost of new goods.

If you want anything good to eat, call at Wells'.
