CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

Many difficulties are arising in schools from the shortsightedness of parents to their children's interests. Calm reflection will show anyone that the teacher is not a tyrant delighting in torture, nor anything approaching it. Yet this seems to be the view held by many parents. It is no will statement to say that not once in a hundred times is chastisement inflicted where the sufferer has not deserved it long before and in greater severity than is meted out to him. It is only as an extreme measure that physical punishment is resorted to by the teacher, and only after every other means to change a perverted nature has failed. Those pupils punished are generally ringleaders in mischief, and that not harmless. In justice to their mates their harmful influence should be broken, and suspension, perhaps expulsion, is the proper relief. But the child himself has rights which should not be disregarded and there is nothing bad in his nature, no inherent evil, and by strong measures he can be turned into right ways. Corporal punishment is given for the child's own interest, never in anger as revenge for trouble made the teacher but as penalty for infraction of wholesome and indispensable school regulations. A child should be taught regard for law from his earliest days and then he becomes a good citizen. Horace Mann's saying, the more schools the less jails and state prisons, is true only of schools in which discipline is maintained and respect for rules compelled.

COUNCIL CREEK.

Good work has been done in the council creek improvement but the making of a suitable outlet should be looked to before the rains come. The ditch through the campus seems to be in just the condition it was before attention was called to it. A ditch, like a chain, is no better than its poorest part and on this outlet depends the drainage of a large part of the city.

A man who takes a public office, even if there is no remuneration in it, should be willing to do its work properly. If he cannot attend to it without neglecting his own business he should resign and let some one else be put in his place who will. Better this than that the public interests should suffer.

Teacher's Institute.

The day session of the teachers institute will be held in the public school building beginning this morning at 10 o'clock and lasting through Saturday. Among the instructors are State Supt. G. M. Irwin of Salem, Prof. W. A. Wetzel of Portland, Supt. Ackerman of Multnomah county, principal of the Harrison street school, Portland; Prin. F. Glafac, Jr., of the Holladay school, Portland, Principals Stanley of Hillsboro, Thomas of Forest Grove and Curtis of Cornelius. The sessions are open to the public and all who may feel inclined are cordially invited to attend.
