The execrable condition of some of the roads, especially immediate approaches to the Grove, should inspire every one to see that they are put in decent shape before another winter. That wagons should be mired within a quarter of a mile of town is a disgrace that should not be tolerated. If necessary the business men should raise a fund to help better them. Some of the roads are good but every one ought to be. For country highways time has to be taken for improvement but the roads to town influence the trade and delay means loss.

Knowing that the impression generally exists that we the undersigned have been afflicted with the disease known as the barber's itch and further that the same had generated from F. A. Hartman's barber shop, and realizing that said impression has materially injured the trade and reputation with which the shop has been favored, we consider it prudent and doing justice to Mr. Hartman as well as to ourselves that we state to the public that we nor either of us were afflicted such disease. We hope this will convince the people of the fallaciousness of the impression and that Mr. Hartman will soon regain the trade which he has lost thereby.

BREAD!!

"How is it, people say, you can sell bread cheaper than other people?" We will explain. We don't pay rent. We do our own work, even sawing and splitting our own wood, and credit nobody because we don't want to be credited. We buy Eastern Oregon flour by the car load and pay spot cash for it. Then we sell from our own counter only and pay no middle men commission, and give the consumer the benefit. These, friends and foes, are the reasons why we can sell bread cheaper any other party. Fifty loaves for one dollar still and forever. Our bread is not the real baker's bread but it is of the home made quality. Try it and judge for yourself.

A Novel Reception.

The novel reception given by Mrs. Gregg Friday evening for the benefit of the Christian church was eminently successful socially and financially. The cents gathered in added a number of dollars to the church treasury and those who parted with their cents did so cheerfully with only the regret that it is seldom they can spend evenings and money so satisfactorily.

The whole second floor of the residence was thrown open and spacious as it is there was scarcely room for the numbers there. At the door one paid a nickel to gain admittance and then he was confronted with a dilemma. On every side were startling placards calling attention to the varied attractions. The Art Gallery showed to every person at least one beautiful picture—his own—for it was a mirror. Near here was Peggy Norton, the most expensive of the sideshows. Dr. Ward was in charge and many were the four cents he inveigled out of people for the chance to step behind the curtain and see a little old Irishwoman made out of a person's hand with the mouth between the fingers and thumb, funny bow or shake her head in answer to questions. An alcove in the parlor was the lover's retreat and above it the alluring legend, "Two's a company, three's a crowd." Inside was the stern injunction "No kissing allowed." Another corner held the greatest living picture. Raising the drapery which concealed it you beheld yourself. Galatea, that beautiful statue with which the old sculptor fell in love, was there and it was really wonderful how while it had the blush of life it had also the immobility of marble.

But the center of attention was the booth where by the pale lamplight Miss Lloyd Jessup as the gypsy fortune teller foretold the future, by the falling of the cards or the lines of the hand, when her palm had been crossed by silver. In another room Yum Yum served dainty refreshments of tea and cake in Japanese fashion. The admission to all was in cents—one, two, three and four—and a bank changed all coins at a shave.

During the evening's program Prof. Robertson read one of Ian Maclaren's homely sketches of Drumtochty life, and Miss Jessup recited well the story of the Spanish gypsy girl.

It was a novelty and Mrs. Gregg, the hostess, saw that every one enjoyed the evening amid the varied attractions which she had provided and which were a surprise to all.
