The Oregonian is now attacking Mr. Tongue because his views do not coincide with what it claimed for him. It was a delusion that the Oregonian led itself into in imagining that Mr. Tongue the candidate for the U. S. senator was any different from Mr. Tongue the candidate for congressman. His position now is the same as then and it is making many friends for him. Some feared that the Oregonian's apparent advocacy was a subtle scheme to defeat him and they rejoice that its malevolence, manifested a year ago but concealed until now in this campaign, is now apparent. Like the Medusa head, upon whomsoever the Oregonian turns its baleful countenance that one miserably perishes.

In the death of John W. Sappington, county treasurer, Washington county lost a faithful servant as well as a citizen whose influence was widely felt.

Forest Grove is to have the veterans' encampment and now it remains to make it the best ever held. No better location than Naylor's grove can be found in the state. It is well shaded, within one block of a sidewalk to town, has wood in plenty at hand and will have city water and be lighted by electricity. There is plenty of room for horses, room for games and a good place for everybody. All stock will be taken out so that there may be no interference with the campers. A few finishing touches only are needed. These should be made at once so that the grounds may be slightly and convenient and yet not have the freshness of the improvements visible to show that the spot has been artificially prepared.

A Good Republican.

The subject of this sketch, G. W. Marsh, is a farmer of some means, a deep thinker and a good talker on the different issues of the day. He was born at Centerville, Washington Co., Oregon, in 1859, and is accordingly now thirty-seven years old. He was educated in the public schools of Washington county. During vacation working and earning his living and clothes. Having married quite young and settled down to hard work, he did not leave off his studies, but at night after his day's work was done, continued to study the different branches in which he was deficient, thus making of himself a scholar of no mean attainments.

He has always taken a deep interest in politics from his youth up; has always been a republican, as his father was before him, placing his maiden vote for Garfield, and since then has worked hard for the republican party in the primaries of the precinct of which he is a resident. He has been honored as a delegate to the county convention several times and to the last congressional convention which was held at Albany, recently.

He also stands high in the order of Knights of Pythias, of which fraternal society he has been a member for the past five years, and has served two years as representative to the Grand Lodge of K. of P., where he has made many friends both in and out of the order. And last but not least he was, at the republican convention held in Hillsboro April 30th, nominated as one of the representatives of this county in the lower house of the legislature.
