THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The long-awaited republican national platform is no longer subject for speculation, it speaks for itself, and it speaks with no uncertain sound. On every issue its expression is clear and pointed. The oldtime policies are re-iterated and with justifiable pride the history of the past is pointed to as the best guarantee for the future.

The nominees are strong and able men whose records, like their party's, will stand scrutiny. An account of the convention and the full text of the platform will be found under the heading "Choice of the Republicans" on an inside page.
