

Old John Harding's Money

(Copyright, 1903, by C. B. Lewis.)
There was a buzz of excitement throughout almost a whole county because old John Harding was dead and a search of the house had failed to reveal his money. He was an old bachelor, living on a farm with his brother Henry and his sister Hannah, and it was known that he had been hoarding for forty years. He died in his bed without giving an alarm and without leaving any message as to where he had hidden his wealth.

I was interested in the case as a distant relative, while scores became interested through curiosity. We had to hire men and arm them with guns to keep the searchers off the farm, and there were many among them who would have kept every dollar of the treasure had they stumbled upon it. Where to search after the house had been fruitlessly gone over was the question, and it was a puzzling one.

Put yourself in old Mr. Harding's place and tell me where you would hide that money. Not in the house, for fear of robbers first and a search later on; not in the barn, because the building was liable to be struck by lightning and burned. He wanted to keep it away from his relatives, and yet he wouldn't want it lost for good and all, nor would he wish it to fall into the hands of strangers. That is simply human nature. It is a paradox, but it is human nature as well. You wouldn't throw it down the well, because the well would be searched. There would be the same objection to sheds and stacks as to the barn.

Both Hannah and Henry felt sure the old man had buried the money. I felt just as certain to the contrary. He had brought it home in installments, and he would not run the risk of opening and closing a cache seven or eight different times. Much of the lost money was drawn out of bank two weeks previous to his death.

Whenever he went to town, he wore a pair of boots. On all other days he wore a pair of old shoes, which were soft and easy on his feet. He did not change back to his boots as soon as he reached home, but only after he had returned from walking about the farm; hence it might be inferred that he had to pass over bad ground.

The woman brought me his boots just as he had pulled them off for the last time. There was dried mud on them. It could not be mud from the highway, because when he went to town last the roads were dusty. The sole of the right boot was considerably worn, and in a crevice I found a little sand. Again, on that same boot, sticking to the mud, were several blades of grass. She brought me the suit of clothes he had worn that day and for three or four days subsequently, and I found cockles and burrs on the trousers and bits of rotten wood in one of the coat pockets.

To the west of the house and half a mile away was the forest. To reach it he had to pass through the orchard. Between the orchard and the forest was a creek. On the east side of it, where, I judged, he would naturally cross, was a bed of sand. On the other side was a muddy spot, but with a log to walk on. The forest covered eighty acres of ground, and but little of it had ever been cleared of underbrush.

In going from the house through the orchard and across the creek and back I got plenty of cockles and burrs on my clothes, and had I made a misstep at the log I should have fallen into the mud and water. Granted that the old man had hidden his money in the woods, what particular spot should I look for? The brother had not happened to see him go beyond the orchard, but on one occasion, when he had need of a certain tool and went to the shed to find it, it was missing. Two hours later it had been restored. It was a mallet that he wanted.

Going on the theory that the old man had used the mallet, I went to the shed and looked at all the tools. Most of them were rusty with the dampness. There was rust on a certain auger and on a certain chisel, but it was fresh rust. The point of the auger also retained some bits of the last wood it had been bored into. These bits I was assured by several persons had a beechy taste. Therefore I reasoned that the auger had been bored into a beech tree. I had no doubt that he had used mallet, chisel and auger to make a hiding place for his money.

The first move was to go through the forest in search of what might be called eligible beech trees. I marked off twenty within ten minutes' walk of the creek and then began a close inspection of each one. I did not look at tops or trunks, but on the ground. There were plenty of brush and limbs and dead leaves, but at the end of two days' steady search I found chips and splinters in piling around and then knew that the quest was ended.

Never did a man hide his money in a safer place or with more skillful hands. The tree was a double one for the first four feet from the ground. Where the two came together was a decayed spot. It wasn't larger than a man's fist when Harding discovered it, and funguses had taken root and were thriving. Everything looked so perfectly natural that I was a good hour getting at the keyhole of the treasure box. Had I not found sure evidences of his work in a few chips and splinters the tree would have been put down on the list of failures. He did not intend to leave those evidences behind him. As fast as he cut out the wood he placed it aside, and as he crossed the creek on his way home he threw the chips into the water, as I afterward ascertained.

Well, I have nothing more to tell. The money was found and divided according to law.

FOR THE MOST POPULAR LODGE IN WASHINGTON COUNTY.

This beautiful gavel, bearing the emblem of the order and appropriately engraved, will be presented by The News on September 1 to the lodge receiving the largest number of votes from its paid subscribers as their choice of the most popular lodge in Washington County. The word lodge is intended to include granges, courts of Catholic Foresters, camps of the Woodmen, posts of the G. A. R., and every local branch of any secret, fraternal, benevolent or insurance order represented in the county.

The gavel is of ebony, of finest workmanship, and costs $30.00, so that it will be worthy to be used by the presiding officer of so distinguished a lodge. Every subscriber who has paid, old subscriber who pays up or new paying subscriber, is entitled to vote for the lodge he designates as follows: Five votes for a yearly subscription; two for six months; one for three months. These may be divided among different lodges if preferred. Send your name and postoffice address with your votes, so that it can be seen that you are entitled to vote. The News has passed the thousand mark in actual Washington County subscribers, and takes this means of hastening the time when it shall have 2,000.

CATTLE IN THOUSANDS ON THE HILLS.

Ten thousand cows, fifteen thousand sheep and six thousand goats have their home in Washington county. Assessor Wilcox has recently stated to the Immigration Bureau at Portland that the average prices are cattle $30 and sheep $5. The manufacturers of Carnation cream at Forest Grove are making preparations to largely increase the number of dairy cattle, as their condenser wants milk from 3000 cows while it has but 1000 now contributing.

BIG "SMALL FRUIT" — OREGON GOOSE-BERRIES.

Though they are classed among "small fruits," three gooseberries, by no means exceptional, which are on the editor's desk as he writes, measure 2 3/4, 2 1/4 and 2 1/2 inches respectively. Five acres in the county produced 10,000 quarts this year.
