THE LAW AND THE WOULD BE REFORMER

In these columns it has been frequently, even persistently, intimated that in the editorial opinion the efforts for a prohibitory ordinance in Forest Grove were directed by those who lacked either the intelligence or the intention to stop illegal liquor selling here. That through ignorance or through perversity a sure and speedy method of accomplishing their announced object through the state law has been neglected in a wild goose chase for a prohibitory ordinance which notoriously has ever been a failure here.

This stand has not been popular with those whom it placed in an unfavorable light, but it is founded on facts and common sense which in time will work their own justification.

That the state law could have been invoked against the sale of liquor in Forest Grove ever since the repeal of the last, and worthless, prohibitory ordinance, and can be invoked until the passage of another (which may reasonably be expected to be equally worthless) is an assertion which is here fortified by quotations from a standard legal authority, Black on Intoxicating Liquors, the edition used being that of 1892. The case references are numerous in support of each of the author's assertions.

Sec. 82.—The liquor traffic is nowhere in this country recognized as a lawful business, except as permitted and regulated by positive law.

Sec. 226.—Further, the exercise by a municipality of such exclusive power (entire control over the subject of liquor selling, to the exclusion of all other authorities) granted to it will have the effect to supersede or suspend the general law of the state on the same subject-matter. So that a person who brings himself within the law, by fully complying with all the regulations adopted by the municipal corporations, is not amenable to the general law, nor punishable for acts which, WITHOUT THE PROTECTION AFFORDED BY THE ORDINANCE, WOULD BE VIOLATIONS OF THE STATUTE.

Exclusive power of this character, granted to a city by its charter or a general act, is to be exercised by the enactment of ordinances. Until this is done, the subject remains without regulation. For example, if the city has exclusive power to provide for the granting of licenses, no one can lawfully engage in the traffic, within its limits, until this power is exercised by ordinance. For until that time, no application can be made, and no other steps taken towards the procurement of a license.

Sec. 223.—The powers conferred upon a municipal corporation must be exercised in conformity to the general law of the state, unless it is clear that the exclusive control of the subject is given to the municipality, or that the general law is to be superseded or suspended by the charter. A statute granting authority to a city to pass ordinances in relation to the liquor traffic does not repeal the general laws on that subject. The rule is, that the municipal ordinances cannot set aside, limit or enlarge the statute law of the state, unless its power to do so can be shown in express terms or by necessary implication.

OREGON'S FIRST MARSHAL.

President H. W. Scott of the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition in his address before the United States Senate committee last week, in emphasizing the importance of the Oregon country, gave especial credit to one of Washington county's earliest residents whose widow died here but recently and whose son still tills the farm his father took up in the early days when having the pick of all the Pacific Northwest and knowing it all he chose the Tualatin Plains for his home.

"Years before the war with Mexico, which led to the acquisition by conquest and purchase of California citizens of the United States had migrated to the Oregon Country in sufficient numbers to establish a government. In May, 1818, a provisional government was formed with avowed allegiance to the United States, but it was difficult, for British influence in the country was strong, and at a meeting called to form government the Americans prevailed by a bare majority—a majority of two. This was effected only through a union of the missionaries, of the free trappers of American nativity, and of other elements of our pioneer life, not congruous in the minor details, but actuated by a common sentiment of allegiance to the United States.

Joseph L. Meek, a native of Virginia, who had gone in his boyhood to the far West and taken up the life of an explorer and trapper, together with an Indian wife, was chief in this effort. Few persons in our humbler life have done more for this country of ours than this untutored Virginian boy. He it was who at that meeting forced the issue that by a majority of but two decided the allegiance of the people of the Oregon Country to the United States.

These were the efforts that gave us—gave the United States—possession of the western half of this continent
