Question of Origin.

In the library of the College of the City of New York State Superintendent Skinner was conversing with Professor McNulty, who holds the chair of philosophy. The professor was maintaining that co-education was successful in practice, quoting a mass of statistics to prove his point, whereupon Mr. Skinner responded, with a wave of the hand, "Ah, statistics are like sausages!"

"Statistics like sausages!" exclaimed Dr. McNulty, surprised at the simile.

"Yes," said the superintendent innocently. "They depend on the maker."—New York Times.
