pard. He could not see, but he knew that the trappings of the vehicle were superior. Outside he heard the soldier, who was preparing to enter, say: "This carriage travels on most urgent business for her royal highness, captain. It is not to be stopped." A moment later he was inside and the door slammed. The carriage rocked as Quinnox swung up beside the driver. "You may as well be comfortable," said Lorry's companion as he sat rigid and restless. "We have a long and rough ride before us."

EXAMPLE OF HIS LOQUACITY.

Senator J. C. S. Blackburn is never at a loss for a word and is ready to talk at a minute's notice. His friends like to joke him about his garrulity, and recently a colleague told this story at a dinner at which Senator Blackburn was to give a toast: "In his younger days my colleague, Mr. Blackburn, was very chivalrous. Asked by a friend to be a second in a duel, Mr. Blackburn readily consented. At sunrise the parties met at the appointed place. It was Mr. Blackburn's duty to say the last words about the terms of the duel. And, gentlemen," continued the speaker, "do you know that duel never took place?"

A murmur of "Why not?" went around the table. "For a very simple reason," continued the speaker. "When Joe finished speaking, it was too dark for a duel."

The Diamonds of St. Petersburg. St. Petersburg society is brilliant not only by reason of the diamonds and beauty of its women, but also owing to the splendid uniforms and blazing decorations of its men. The ladies wear such diamonds as are only seen at exhibitions or in the windows of a fashionable jeweler. The diamonds of St. Petersburg are famous, for not only do they frequently measure half an inch across, but their diameter is as frequently the same. Your representative was dazzled by a succession of solid precious stones whose weight could only be reckoned in avoirdupois. The jewels one sees at Covent Garden are slim and puny baubles by comparison. St. Petersburg seems to buy its diamonds by the pound, and the wealth "of Ormuz and of Ind" scintillates in the ears and around the slender throats of its fair women.—London Mail.

Our Own Products.

Consular reports say that California prunes have been sent to France, repacked there and brought back over the Atlantic as the genuine Gallic product. That is not in the least surprising. A great deal of Yankee peanut oil (and perhaps some other kinds of oil) is shipped abroad and later is returned to the United States as olive oil of choice quality. And Maine sardines go to the old world and are then imported as delicious French fish, with all sorts of foreign stamps upon the boxes. Moreover, California wines are exported in large quantities and returned as the products of European vineyards. And yet the merits of our own prunes and oils and sardines and wines are sufficient to commend them to consumers without the glamour of exotic labels.—New York Tribune.

A Famous Cattery.

Cattery is a modern word, apparently coined for the benefit of those people who go in for the rather modern hobby of keeping prize cats. One of the most famous "catteries" in England is that possessed by Lady Decies. Among the inmates is one of the most valuable chinchilla cats in Europe. The very rare Siamese variety is also well represented. Each room in the cattery has a little fireplace and a cork carpet, and the cats sleep in beds especially designed for their comfort by Lady Decies herself. Their exercise is taken on a series of little ladders, and two attendants are kept constantly employed in attending to these little aristocrats of the cat world.—London Hour Glass.

Story the Wood Told.

A boy was sitting near the stove watching the fire burn. All at once he fancied that he heard a voice speak to him, and he thought it was a piece of wood. The wood said: "Once upon a time I was a seed that had fallen off a tree. I lay on the ground a week. Then some clouds spread over the sky and it began to snow. The snow covered me, and I lay on the ground all winter in the warm snow. When spring came I began to grow. I grew until I was fifteen years old. One day a wood-cutter came along and cut me down. He put me into a wagon and rode down to the wood yard. I lay in the wood yard about a month, and then your father came and carried me to your house." This was all the piece of wood said.
