SOME ODD RAILROAD RULES. Curious Early Experiences in Trans-portation in Pennsylvania.

Some of the regulations in force on the earliest railroads built in Pennsylvania read very queerly in these days of "limiteds" and "flyers," says the Boston Transcript. A number of them are quoted in a brief paper read before the Engineers' Society of Western Pennsylvania on early experiences in transportation by Antes Snyder, and abstracted in part in the Scientific American supplement. Says this paper:

"When the commonwealth opened the Philadelphia and Columbia Railthe State tolls for its use, just as the turnpikes of the day were used. But it was soon discovered that a certain character of vehicles was needed and ly during the day Mr. Gould may be that rules and regulations as to times done by large and well-equipped ship-Of all human diseases, Contagious Blood pers much more cheaply than they successfully for nearly fifty years for contagious Blood ed for the horse as motive power, Poison. It shall be the duty of the cenductors of cars moving with less speed upon the railways, upon notice by ringing a bell, blowing a horn or otherwise, of the approach of a locomotive engine or other cars moving in the same direction at a greater speed, to proceed with all possible disputch to the first switch in the course of their passage, and pass off said track until said locomotive engine or other cars moving at greater speed can pass by. The conductors of the slower cars are directed to open and close the switches so as to leave them in proper order. Any person who shall refuse or neglect to comply with the provisions of this regulation shall, for every offense, forfelt and pay the sum of $10."

"It must have been a very interesting and novel sight, indeed, when the horse and the locomotive weer used indiscriminately on the same track and were struggling for supremacy as the future motive power of our railroads. and the approach of a locomotive was heralded by the tooting of a horn. Even at that time the right of way was given to the fast horse."

SOME SWEARING DEFENSIBLE.

Many Great and Good Men Have Used an Occasional Oath.

According to the Anti-Profanity League the swearing habit is "the national evil." Undoubtedly the use of profaulty is extremely prevalent; a person needs merely to keep his ears open on the street to learn this, says the Boston Transcript. But whether it is so general as to justify one in terming it the national evil is a matter of opinion. Not all swearing, moreover, is wholly indefensible. There are various kinds of swearers and it will not do to lump them in one class with a single label. Besides the habitual and commonplace swearers, whose profanity is mere redundant and colorless verbiage, and the vulgar and diffuse swearers, whose oaths are rank and noisome, one must recognize also as a distinct category the discreet and moderate swearers who employ an occasional oath with fine emphasis and artistic effect.

Many great and good men belong to the last class. Even the father of his country is said to have sworn vigorously when the emergency seemed to require departure from his customary rule of unvarnished speech. This sort of discriminating profanity is vestly different from the causeless and gratuitous swearing of habitual and vulgar oathmongers. Indeed, the man who now and then vents his emotions in an oath is rather preferable to the one who always bottles up his feelings, however strong the provocation to break forth. A robust ebullition is better than ingrowing profanity. Silence tain circumstances. A saying of Jo-seph Choate occurs to the settler in may be as profane as words under certhis connection. A noted prelate was once playing golf with Mr. Choate, and after foozling a tee shot egregiously, stood looking at the ball for several moments. After waiting for the bishop to say something, Mr. Choate remarked: "Bishop, that was the profanest silence I ever heard."

As for the Anti-Profanity League, the purpose of the organization is certainly worthy, but somehow the settler cannot develop a high degree of en thusiasm in such a cause. He is a bit Movements for the suppression of this and that and what not fall to interest him profoundly. It seems to him that what is needed in the field of social reform is not so much the suppression of bad things as the promotion of good things. Reformers should concentrate their energies on positive and constructive work, rather than purely negative and restrictive undertakings.

WAYS OF GEORGE GOULD.

He Keeps Himself in Good Health by Athletic Exercise.

George J. Gould, physically, is in striking contrast to not a few of the directors of the Gould companies who were so actively identified with the late Jay Gould. George Gould's fondness for sports and athletic games keeps him in excellent physical condition, says the New York Mail. He almost invariably arrives at his office in the Western Union building, 195 Broadway, a little before 10 a. m. His pace is swift and only a good walker can keep up with him. Often in the coldest weather he comes with his overcoat on his arm.

Immediately upon reaching his desk he throws off not only his undercost. but his waistcoat as well, and pitches into a vast amount of work. Frequentseen passing rapidly through the corridors of the Western Union building in this same negligee attire.

Not long ago a midday meeting of the directors of the Texas and Pacific Rilroad was called, and Russell Sage, R. B. POWELL, that they could get this transportation John T. Terry and Sam Sloan, all active associates of the late Jay Gould, came down the corridor from George Gould's office, all wearing winter overcoats, although the weather was abominably mild. Mr. Gould appeared a few minutes later minus his undercoat and waistcoat, and in this attire presided at the meeting, while his aged confreres, in conventional dress and holding high silk hats with a great deal of dignity, unanimously ratified his propositions.

Mr. Gould rarely gets further downtown than the Harriman offices, at 120 Broadway. He could easily pass through Wall street without being generally recognized. Even some of the Wall street reporters do not know him
