The plant in bloom was stimulated by acetylene gas at night, while the less matured one depended on sunlight only

The experiments were carried on through three months in a hothouse This house was divided into two parts by a curtain. This curtain was hung in such a way that each half of the house received the same illumination from the sun. The beds on each side were exactly alike, not only in size, but in location and contents. If a lily was planted in a certain part of a bed on one side, another of the same species and age was set out in the same part of the corresponding bed on the other. An equipment consisting of twelve 85-candle power acetylene lamps was erected on one side of the curtain.
