CAPTAIN R. C. MARKEE, OF QUINCEY, ILL.

Captain R. C. Markee, of Quincy, Ill., above of which is his likeness, is visiting his eldest brother Samuel, in this city. The Captain had not seen his brother since 1862 when the latter left Illinois with ox teams to cross the plains for Oregon, where he settled in Washington County and has lived here ever since.

The captain is an interesting man, a prominent G. A. R. and U. V. U. veteran, besides being the father of eleven sons, all of which are musicians and comprise the Markee Family Band so well known in the east. Mr. Markee is delighted with Oregon and is enjoying a good long, and well earned rest here.

To Remodel Constitution

public opinion and with a large appropriation, has brought forth the demand that any bill for a constitutional convention shall be submitted to the people for ratification before the convention shall meet; and the practice of officers of government in riding on rail and boat lines on passes has brought up a proposed amendment prohibiting them from accepting passes or reduced rates for themselves or for members of their families.

These amendments, says the pamphlet, would bring needed "improvements in the art of self-government," and such improvements "are as much the result of experiments as are improvements in machine tools. There are only about 75 years of experiments by many men between the reaping cradle on the one side and the self-binding reaper and the combined steam harvester and thresher on the other; between the quill pen and the modern typewriting machine; between the stagecoach and the 100-ton locomotive. Similar examples run through our daily experience with tools."

The pamphlet continues: "During the past 16 years the people of Oregon have tried several very interesting experiments in the art of self-government, including the Australian ballot law, registration of voters, the initiative and referendum on state laws, and in the city of Portland on charter-making, statutory regulation of party primaries, and a direct nomination law.

"The net result of these experiments is conceded to be better and more satisfactory government.

"Therefore we believe it would be well for the people to remove the restrictions and reserve to themselves the additional powers provided for in the suggested amendments to the constitution of Oregon, and also to enact the anti-pass law, to prevent all their servants from accepting corporation favors."
