Destruction of Castle Rock

The effects of the commercial age are being very effectually brought out even in this far away distant Oregon when Portland capitalists tackle the proposition of blowing up Castle Rock, one of our most famous pieces of scenery on our world renowned Columbia.

The purpose of this move is to provide building material—as if this commodity was actually scarce in Oregon. The right authorities are using methods however to stop this mutilation of Oregon's landscape, and it is to be hoped that Castle Rock will continue to stand in its commanding place on our beautiful river as a relic of times gone past and events to come.

Teachers' Local Institute

A local institute will be held at Beaverton on March 31, 1906. Able instructors have been employed and arrangements effected for a pleasant and profitable meeting.

There is a growing demand for teachers who are efficient in tact and scholarship and who know how to teach others.

School districts are willing to go down into their pockets and give the wages if they can have teachers who can earn it.

It is fair to presume that a teacher who avails himself of every opportunity to improve is trying to give value received, and the institutes where men of long experience in school work are to instruct is the place to glean help in the profession.

A COSTA RICAN VOLCANO

Pen Picture of Pons and its Dazzling Surroundings.

On the island of Costa Rica is the remarkable volcano of Pons. The mountain has an altitude of about 8,500 feet. A traveler who makes the ascent reaching the lip of the crater finds himself at the brink of a vast perpendicular sided pit, at the bottom of which lies a motionless pool of yellowish water. The sense of deadly stillness and desolation is undisturbed by any sound of life. The almost vertical walls are devoid of even a vestigial plant creation; not a bird wings its way through the air, the surface of the lake is without a ripple, and even the man voice sounds strange and incongruous. Suddenly the silence is broken by a great and startling ground rumbling, and a huge column of a dark colored liquid is thrown a vast height from a spot near the center of the lake. The column ordinarily rises to a height varying from 500 feet. Almost instantly a vast volume of vapor is evolved which surmounts the column and rises to an immense height.

A thousand feet below the lake or pool, along the shores of which it is necessary to move about with care because of numerous concealed pits filled with a slimy substance, and a large excess of sulphuric acid hardens in a few moments what is exposed to the air, and consequently the pits are covered with slight crusts that render it almost impossible to distinguish between them and the ground. If a foot goes through this crust it will be found that few days the shoe will be destroyed, the seams cannot resist the acid. The lake at closer view is discovered to be covered with clouds of vapor and is impossible to see for any distance. Among other gases, sulphur dioxide is present in considerable quantities at times the smell becomes almost unbearable.

At close range the water is green in color, and it is so acid that it burns the tongue when tasted. The dark cloth moistened with the liquid instantly becomes red and is ultimately destroyed. The temperature at shore, while varying considerably, ranges around 115 degrees F. One of the greatest eruptions known a tremendous column of dark liquid to an estimated height of 2,000 feet was about 300 feet in diameter. The waves produced on the lake by such outbursts are formidable, and long after the eruption has ceased the whole lake is filled with the roar of the troubled waters.—Chicago News.

Trout.
A trout is a trout from the day it is born, but not until it gets into the ocean is a salmon a salmon. While it lives in a river it is a parr. On the western coast August and September are the months for the principal runs of salmon. Early fall is the season for eastern trout, followed by the Green River and Loch Leven in the late fall. Winter and early spring are the seasons for rainbow trout, and along the coast February comes the eastern brook trout, which is followed by lake trout and mykiss, commonly known as gray trout, from a peculiar red marking on the throat.—New York Herald.
