What a Heap of Happiness It Would Bring to Forest Grove Homes.

...to do housework with an aching back. ...saves you hours of misery at leisure work. ...women only knew the cause—that kidney pains come from sick kidneys. ...would save much needless woe. ...Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys.

...Mrs. Mary Bumgarner, of 424 Water Street, Salem, Ore., says: "I have found Doan's Kidney Pills a remedy that surely if it could be prescribed to endorse them so that other sufferers from kidney complaint may know how to get relief. Doan's Kidney Pills at a drug store and several members of our family have used them with the most gratifying results. I took them myself for aching back and a dragging down feeling. It comes from irregular and deranged kidneys. The results were of the best. The aching and soreness were banished and the kidneys were rendered normal. My health became better in every way."

DOCTORS MISTAKES

...said often to be buried six feet under ground. But many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous prostration, another with pain here and there, and in this way they present alike to themselves and their easy-going or over-cautious doctor, separate diseases, for which, assuming them to be such, prescribe pills and potions. In reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some system disease. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, keeps up his treatment until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better. The doctor, on long treatment, but probably worse. A proper medicine like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely cured the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery. It has been well said, "A disease known is half cured."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully devised by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate system. It is made of native American medicinal plants and is perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the female system. As a powerful invigorating tonic "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," run-down, debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," house-keepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic. As a soothing and strengthening nerve and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitement attendant upon functional and organic disease of the uterus. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. One to three a dose. Easy to take as candy.

Helping Billy Out.

For several hours Billy Van North had been contemplating a blue envelope, addressed in a delicate hand, containing a bundle of familiar letters. There was a rap at the door.

"Why, Dick?" he exclaimed after a moment of hesitancy. "Dick Murry, I'm glad to see you. Come in and let me congratulate you. I've heard of your great success, and they tell me that Stern is going to star you in a new play." He was shaking both of his friend's hands after an attempt to brush the letters and boxes into a drawer that only succeeded in scattering them about his desk.

"Yes," said Murry. "I've been running in luck, but I looked you up to congratulate you. I heard this morning—" "There's nothing in it—now," Van North interrupted. "The date was set for June, but"—He waved his hand over the scattered letters and jewelers' boxes.

"Is there any one else?" "No; I made a fool of myself, that is all. It was just a trivial thing, and I was stumped. Thought I'd wait until—Now I've lost."

"Don't say you've lost," retorted Murry, "until the girl has married another fellow. Come, go to lunch with me. We'll talk it over, and possibly I can help you."

Van North shook his head. "No, thanks, old man," he said. "I haven't time. There's one chance in a hundred this afternoon, and I'm going to take it. She won't be at home tonight, and she sails for Europe tomorrow, but she's coming down town in half an hour. Goes shopping every Tuesday and drives down Twenty-third street about 2 o'clock. It's almost hopeless, Dick. I'm going to speak to her when she goes into a store."

Murry had been smiling and thinking deeply. "It's a good plan," he said, "unless the lady has a heart of stone. But I must go. I'm in a hurry. Good-bye. I'll see you later."

Van North watched the tall, muscular figure of the young actor until he had passed the long row of desks in the outer office and had disappeared in the street. Then Billy closed his door and began pacing the floor, his head bowed dejectedly. Presently he paused at the desk, selected a small, square, plush-covered box from among the rest, hesitated and placed it in his pocket. Then, glancing at his watch, he hurried from his office.

He walked quickly to the corner of Twenty-third street and, heedless of a policeman's order to move on, stood shoulders above the restless crowd and eagerly scanned every cab that passed.

Suddenly he threw away the cigar he had just lighted and raised his hand to his hat, but there was no light of recognition in the eyes that glanced at him for an instant, wavered and then found something of deep interest in the opposite direction. He paused when the cab door swung back and a dainty foot was placed upon the step. Then, clenching his fists, he stepped forward.

"Helen—dear—I want—I must speak to you," he stammered, although it was not what he had intended to say. He received no reply. The young lady raised her head high and, ignoring him, started across the sidewalk. No ray of hope lay beyond the entrance to the store. Desperately he placed his hand upon her arm.

"Just a moment, Helen. Won't you give me an opportunity to explain—to tell you how I regret—" His ineffectual pleading was interrupted by a voice that hissed into his ear:

"Look here, young feller, wot yer doin'?" A powerful hand clutched his shoulder from behind. He tried to face his captor, but the hand slid down and twisted his arm, and he could not turn.

"Lady," the voice continued, "if this here mut is insultin' you jus' say the word an' I'll break every bone in his blame body." A huge, dirty fist was held threatening before Van North's eyes, while an arm shot suddenly around him, pinning him, helpless, against his adversary.

"The girl had grown very pale. 'Don't dare, sir!' she exclaimed, her eyes flashing. 'He—he is my—leave—this instant, sir, or I shall call an officer.'"

"Beg pardon, miss. I didn't know him. Thought he was flirting," the fellow replied, relaxing his hold, and Van North turned to see the tough figure, clad in a suit of glaring plaid, swaggering up the street.

"Oh, Billy! I—I was afraid! The brute!" Tears filled the girl's eyes, and she clung nervously to Van North's hand while he assisted her into the cab.

"Come, sweetheart," he said, "you are unnerved. You must let me take you home again. The shopping can wait—until day after tomorrow."

"Billy—I'm—so—so sorry," she sobbed softly. "And I'm so happy now," she added, raising her eyes, but Van North was gazing in astonished silence through the cab window.

As they whirled up the street he had caught a glimpse of a glaring plaid suit in the crowd. The man who wore it had lost his slouching gait and was swinging along familiarly. He caught Van North's eye, raised his cap and bowed, smiling.

"Dick Murry! By George!" "Oh, who is it, dear?" asked the girl. "I couldn't see."

"The best fellow in the world," Van North answered. "I will introduce him to you some day." JAMES TRUE.

THE GREASED PIG.

THE GREAT WRITERS.

Ideas and Inspiration Taken by One Author From Another.

BUT GENIUS BORROWS NOBLY

The Crude Ore is Refined and the Raw Material Fashioned into a Thing of Beauty—Shakespeare as a Most Brilliant Example.

Our great writers are not great robbers. Literature is not a repository of stolen goods. What seem like stealings by the steel pen are rather the output of the lapidary or a reissue of the mint or, better still, the borrowings from a bank repaid with interest. "It is wonderful," says Charles Reade, "how genius can borrow." "All literature," remarks Oliver Wendell Holmes, "lives by borrowing and lending," and he adds, "A good image is like a diamond, which may be set a hundred times in as many generations and gain new beauties with every change." This is not a question of originality. "The lighting a candle at a neighbor's fire," observes Dean Swift, "does not affect our property in the wick and flame." "Genius borrows nobly." The transference is often a transmutation. For brass, the borrower brings gold, and for iron, silver, and for wood, brass, and for stones, iron. The crude ore is refined and the raw material fashioned into a thing of beauty.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Huth in his "Life of Buckle" that there is a kind of pedigree in literature. Dante avows his indebtedness to Virgil, as the latter himself was under obligations to Homer.

Aristotle owes much to Virgil, and Spenser borrows frequently from Aristotle. Spenser's "Faerie Queene" gave birth to Fletcher's "Purple Island," and this in turn to Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress"—all like so many blossoms rising from the one stem.

Shakespeare has been called "the great Warwickshire thief." So inveterate is his borrowings habit. He invaded literature like a Napoleon and brought back the rarest of treasures to enrich and beautify his verse. One is surprised to learn that our dramatist has no original plots, that he has given to poetry no new rhythm or stanza and that "he ran not only in the old road, but in the old rut." His "As You Like It" is taken from an old romance. The characters of his "Julius Caesar" are old Romans taken from Plutarch. But what borrowing! Dry bones are turned into living men. The commonest materials are taken into the lambent flame of his genius and transmuted into airy beauty.

Milton, too, is a free borrower. It is this fact, indeed, that makes his verse so rich in learned reminiscence and so gorgeous with "orbic pearl and gold." He owes much to Shakespeare. Some critics think Milton's Eve is borrowed from Shakespeare's Miranda. In the "Taming of the Shrew" occurs the line:

As morning roses newly washed in dew, While Milton in "L'Allegro" speaks of—

Fresh blown roses washed in dew, Milton is very naive to many. Pope is his debtor. Milton's "Smoky Sorceress"—a woman to the waist and fair, but "wending foul in many a scaly fold voluminous and vast"—is made to say, "They call me Eve for a sign portentous hold true; but, familiar grown, I pleased first with attractive graces won the meast averse." Pope sings:

Vine is a monger of a frightful mien As to be hated needs not to be seen; But seen too oft, fades far with her face, We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Tennyson must have had in mind Milton's—

Heaving in a golden chain Thy pendant world Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

Tennyson, indeed, derives much of his exquisite imagery and felicitous phraseology from authors whose names, even to many literary men, do not know.

Pope avows "Vital Spark" idea

CANNING VEGETABLES.

Spinach, Beets, String Beans, All Easily Prepared.

To Can Spinach.—Pick over the spinach when you have washed it and strip the leaves from the main stems with your bruising them. Cover with cold water and leave in this to freshen and crisp them. In an hour's time transfer the leaves, dripping wet, to a granite or porcelain pot, adding no water except that which drips from the spinach. Set this pot or jar in a larger vessel of cold water. Cover the inner vessel closely to keep in the steam and set both over the fire. When the water in the outer pot begins to boil open the inner and stir the contents gently with your wooden ladle to make sure that they are heated to the center. Cover again and let the boil go on for half an hour more. There should be enough liquid from the succulent leaves to cover the spinach when packed into the jars. Seal immediately.

To Can Beets.—Small beets are the best for canning. Wash as for present use and leave an inch of stalk at top to prevent bleeding. Boil in slightly salted water; peel as for the table. Have ready in a neighboring saucepan enough cider vinegar to cover the beets. You must use your own judgment as to quantity. To each quart of vinegar add two tablespoonsful of sugar, a teaspoonful of strained onion juice and a teaspoonful each of pepper and salt. Bring the vinegar to the boil. Pack the beets while hot into heated cans and cover with the vinegar from the boiling saucepan.

To Can String Beans.—The beans must be young and newly gathered. If toughened by long keeping or if old and stringy they are not available for our purpose. With a sharp knife remove the strings from both sides of the beans. As you do this let the prepared beans fall into ice cold water. Now cut them into inch lengths, still dropping the bits into water. Put over the fire covered with cold water slightly salted and peppered. Boil until soft, but not broken. Transfer to heated jars, cover with boiling salted water from the kettle and seal.

To Can Asparagus.—Cut the stalks to within two inches of the tips. The rest of the stem is wood. It will not be eaten and takes up room in the jar that might be occupied to more advantage. Lay the asparagus thus abbreviated evenly and close together in a boiler and cover with cold water slightly salted. Put the cover on the boiler and set over the fire. Bring to a slow boil and keep it up ten minutes, never letting the bubble become violent. Remove the asparagus gently with a wooden ladle; put into the jars, the tips in orderly array, uppermost; fill with boiling salt water and seal.

THE PUBLISHER'S CLAIMS SUSTAINED

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS
The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it is, in fact, the popular work that has been thoroughly revised in every detail and vastly enriched in every way, for the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation. We are of the opinion that this allegation is not only true, but that the work that has been accomplished is of a nature that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained. It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.
