Artist Winters is a professional when it comes to the brush as Goff's hardware store will evince. The sign has added much to the appearance of the store. Mr. Winters is considered one of the best sign painters in Portland.

The gypsies picked up their beds Tuesday and started for other pastures. They are pretty keen, it is said, on fixing up a horse so he will look his best and maybe that accounts for some pretty good looking steeds they had in their retinue.

Art Caples and wife returned from their trip into the mountains Tuesday evening. They both have a healthy color and Art had a beautiful Vandyke when they hit the town, but as the Oregonian once said "Art has shaved for art's sake."

They do say that Dr. Bogges, his brother from Illinois and Professor Chapman got lost in the mountains when they went for some hunting, fishing and sport several days ago and had to walk fifteen miles or more before they got breakfast.

Miss Lina Hancock of Cornelius, is planning to take vocal lessons with some leading artist in Portland this year. Miss Hancock has a voice full of power and beautiful tones and her many friends predict a brilliant success in her musical career.

Mrs. N. J. Shearer of Idaho who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. E. Ridgley and other friends the last month has gone to Jacksonville to see her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Finney and old friends in Jackson County.

J. S. Birdsall of Oakland, Oregon, who was en route to Rainier with his family passed through town yesterday with a blooded colt. This colt took the blue ribbon in a big stock fair in Oakland where scores of colts were listed. He has traveled from Southern Oregon "on foot" and is not in the pinkest kind of condition now. Forty years ago Mr. Birdsall says he made this his headquarters for hunting and trapping. He is acquainted with the old pioneers here.

Two little lads, Clyde Hoyt and Gerard Pierce, hardly out of their swaddling clothes came out from Portland Monday with blankets, fishing tackle, cups, guns, axes, lard pails and what not, strapped onto their backs, bound for Wilson River on foot and alone. Some thought that they might be prodigal run-a-ways but they plead not guilty and said that their papas knew where they were and that they intended to have a good time for a month.

As their wives are over at Newport and have been for the past two weeks, George Hancock and Will Haines went over to that place of summer girls and saline air the other day. When on their return Will was just a little slow—he is very seldom that way however—and both of the boats were jammed to the limit before the bank president presented himself for entrance and was refused to go on because of the overloaded condition of the craft. He plead passionately with the tender to let him on for his friend George was aboard and he wished to see that Hancock did not get into trouble, but it seemed fruitless until George shouted, "Your wife wants to see you, Bill," and with a little extra urging he was let go on. At Philomath, so says a little bird, Will got off the train and the first fellow that "collared" him was the city marshal. And in justice to the man who shovels gold over the counter it might be well to add that the marshal of that city is Haines' father-in-law.
