The glycerine employed in Dr. Pierce's medicines greatly enhances the me properties which it extracts from native medicinal roots and holds in solution much better than alcohol would. It also possesses medicinal properties of its own, being a valuable demulcent, nutritive, antiseptic and antiferment. It adds greatly to the efficacy of the Black Cherry-bark, Bloodroot, Golden Seal root, Stone root and Queen's root, contained in "Golden Medical Discovery" in subduing chronic, or lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and lung affections, for all of which these agents are recommended by standard medical authorities.

In all cases where there is a wasting away of flesh, loss of appetite, with weak stompch, as in the early stages of constomach, as in the early stages of con-sumption, there can be no doubt that gly-cerine acts as a valuable nutritive and aids the Golden Scal root, Stone root, Queen's root and Black Cherrybark in promoting digestion and building up the fiesh and strength, controlling the cough and bringing about a healthy condition of the whole system. Of course, it must not be expected to work miracles. It will not cure consumption except in its earlier stages. [Original.] When I was a little chap living in Cincinnati I was delicate. We had all honor. The question was how and relatives in New Orleans, and at one time I was sent down there for my health. The only route was by the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and I Can't cure a bad back until you made the trip in one of the big steamers of that day. The main feature that I remember was seeing men sitting in the cabin playing cards, with beautifully colored chips. Why they used the chips I was too young to understand. In this connection I also recall their leaving the tables occasionally to go to a little box about the size of a "Punch and Judy" show, placed forward in the cabin, where they drank drinks of (to me) beautiful col-

> The Mississippi was one vast gambling resort from Cairo to New Orleans. There were flatboats fitted up for the purpose that floated slowly down the river, tying up at any point where there were people to be fleeced. and wherever there were planters there were victims. One afternoon one of these flatboats descending with the current was seen from the shore not far below Memphis to be turning in to shore. The only power aboard was in the arms of men and a couple of long sweeps or oars on either side. 'Those on the starboard side flashed in the sunlight, while the tiller oar left a ripple astern. The boat in this way was brought ashore, and a hawser was got out and tied to a stump upon the river bank.

That night Julian Maran, a young planter, stepped aboard the boat and, with one or two of his friends who were already there, opened the game. Maran had sold his plantation and negroes and was going to Baton Rouge to marry his sweetheart and take up his residence there. The money he had received was in bank except a hundred dollars, with which he proposed to amuse himself on the flatboat. He added considerably to his hundred dollars during the evening and, being a chivalrous fellow, considered himself bound to go back the next day and give the bank a chance for "revenge." In a few days the fortune he had in bank was every cent transferred to the safe in the flatboat.

That was a curious age. If there are chivalrous professional gamblers now. we hear nothing of them. There were chivalrous gamblers then, and they made their influence feit. Perhaps it was because gambling had not then been left so far behind other means of making a living as it is now. The gambling propensity has developed into more legitimate forms. Be this as it may, as Maran was parting with the remnant of his fortune, Gustavus Sterling, a professional gambler, who had once been a respectable planter, boarded the flatboat. He had left "the profession" and with his winnings had bought Maran's plantation. When Maran had parted with his last dollar. Sterling walked up on to the river bank with him. "Permit me to say, suh," he said to Maran, "that I have seen many fools in my life, and yo' ar' one of the biggest. Even when a gambler plays fal' the advantage is with him. The men on this boat are of the lowest kind of swindlers."

Maran, maddened, was about to

THE POOR CAT.

One Occasion When the Animal Did Not Come Back.

When the cat died the whole family went into mourning, figuratively if not literally. No common back door cat this, but one that must be buried with where.

Some one proposed cremation, but this was rejected on the ground that it sounded too much like lynching. It was finally proposed that the father, who had to cross a ferry every day to his place of business, should drop it overboard, and as a burial at sea rather appealed to the sentimental attitude of the family this idea was received favorably.

The following morning the remains of the cat were made into a package and securely tied. It was a lovely day, and the ferryboat was crowded with passengers, and what had seemed so simple at home assumed unexpected difficulties in the face of a curious crowd, ready to imagine anything and to put the worst construction on an apparently mysterious action.

Finally it occurred to the father that the best time would be the evening, and he could slip the cat overboard without attracting notice in the dusk. Through the day it occupied a corner of his office, and he was glad when the time came for the return trip.

He waited until the boat was well out in the stream and then, glancing around furtively, laid his hand on the package. Suddenly it struck him what would seem strange in broad daylight would seem doubly so at night.

With a smothered groan he replaced it on the seat beside him. There was no help for it-he would have to carry it home again.

As he took his seat in the train that was to convey him the rest of the way he placed the cat on the shelf above his head and for the first time that day forgot all about it. Hurrying to get off the car when he reached his destination, he was halted by some one behind him, who thrust into his hand the ill fated package.

When he reached his house he threw It down on a chair in the hall and went in to supper. In the middle of it the maid came in and asked how she should cook the meat he had brought with him?"

"Meat!" he exclaimed. "That isn't meat ! It's"-

But at this moment the maid proluted the package and showed him a choice piece of meat. History does not say what the man said who got the cat .- New York Sun.
