

Do You Open Your Mouth

Like a young bird and gulp down what ever food or medicine may be offered you? Or, do you want to know something of the composition and character of that which you take into your stomach whether as food or medicine?

Most intelligent and sensible people now-a-days insist on knowing what they employ whether as food or as medicine. Dr. Pierce believes they have a perfect right to insist upon such knowledge. So he publishes, broadcast and on each bottle-wraper, what his medicines are made of and how they are made. This he feels he can well afford to do because the more the ingredients of which his medicines are made are studied and understood the more will their superior curative virtues be appreciated.

For the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and derangements, giving rise to frequent headaches, backache, dragging-down pain or distress in lower abdominal or pelvic region, accompanied, oftentimes, with a debilitating, pelvic, catarrhal drain and kindred symptoms of weakness, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a most efficient remedy. It is equally effective in curing painful periods, in giving strength to nursing mothers and in preparing the system of the expectant mother for baby's coming, thus rendering childbirth safe and comparatively painless. The "Favorite Prescription" is a most potent, strengthening tonic to the general system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. It is also a soothing and invigorating nerve and cures nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, chorea or St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing nervous symptoms attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the distinctly feminine organs. A host of medical authorities of all the several schools of practice, recommend each of the several ingredients of which "Favorite Prescription" is made for the cure of the diseases for which it is claimed to be a sure. You may read what they say for yourself by sending a postal card request for a free booklet of extracts from the leading authorities, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post.

A TERRIBLE BIG TROUT.

He Was Cunning and a Hard Case, Too, Was This Fish.

We were camping in northern Wisconsin, and one evening after our supper of black bass and bacon we lay under the pine trees smoking and telling fish stories in which it was always the "bigger bass" that got away. The guide listened with the gravity of a man who knew all about fish stories, and finally he knocked the ashes from his pipe and told us a story.

"Once long ago," he said, "there was a terrible big trout up in Smith's pool. Every fellow who fished in the pool had hooked him one time or another, but he always got away, bit off the snood or something."

"I tried to catch him myself a dozen times. One day I was sitting by the pool when, splash, a young robin fluttered out of the nest on a limb above the pool into the water below. In a minute there was a rush, a gleam of yellow, and the old trout had thrown himself clear out of the water and had swallowed the young robin whole."

"What did I do? Well, I climbed that tree in short order, got another one of those young robins, baited my hook with it and threw it in just as lightly as I could. In a minute there was another rush, another gleam of yellow, and again the old trout jumped clear out of the water as he swallowed the robin, and in a minute more I had him hooked."

"It was lucky I wasn't fishing with any of this newfangled rigging these boys use and that I wasn't bothered with a reel to look after, or I would have lost him sure. As it was it took me a devil of a time to get him out."

"Good to eat? Great Scott! We didn't try to eat him. He was so full of hooks we sold him for old iron, you know."

That ended our fish stories for that night.—J. J. A. in Chicago Tribune.

PRIMITIVE ANCHORS.

Stones and Wooden Tubes Filled With Lead First Used.

There appear to be two ideas which have led up to the invention of the modern anchor—first, that of attaching the vessel by means of a rope or chain to a weight sufficiently heavy to keep the vessel from moving when the weight has sunk to the bottom of the sea, and, second, that of using a hook instead of or in addition to the weight, so as to catch in the bottom. The English word anchor is practically the same as the Latin ancora and the Greek ankura, meaning "that which has an angle," from the root ank, bent.

The earliest anchors made on the hook principle probably only had one fluke instead of two. In the "Sussex Archæol. Coll." there is an illustration of what has been surmised to be an anchor made out of the natural forked branch of a tree. It was found with an ancient British canoe at Burham, Sussex. There is in the British Museum an interesting leaden anchor with two flukes bearing a Greek inscription. Its date is about 500 B. C., and it was found off the coast of Cyrene.

The invention of the anchor with two flukes is attributed by Pausanias to Midas, by Pliny to Eupalamos and by Strabo to Anacharsis. Dioscorus Siculus states that the first anchors were wooden tubes filled with lead, while another classical writer says that before the introduction of metal anchors lumps of stone with a hole through the middle, for the attachment of the cable, were used.

The form of the anchors used by the Greeks and Romans is well known from representations on Trajan's column and in the catacombs at Rome. An early Christian symbol. This form does not seem to have changed materially for quite a thousand years. It is shown, by the Bayeux tapestry.

A Yankee Trick.

(Original.)

The colonies of North America, having been composed of different nationalities, were diverse. New York was Dutch, while the adjacent colony on the east, Connecticut, was English, and the two no more mingled than oil and water. Indeed, the border line was the scene of a continuous quarrel.

On one side of this line lived Jonathan Pym, a young Yankee, while on the other lived Katrina Bleeker, a young Dutch girl. Pym used to stray across the boundary line to hunt and fish in the Dutchmen's territory, which only tended to increase the hostility between the two peoples, especially firing the sluggish Dutchmen against the sharp witted New Englander. But when it was learned that Jonathan's incursions were for very different game than fish or fowl, indeed that he was courting Katrina Bleeker, all the Dutchmen on the border laid down their clay pipes, set their schnapps mugs on the table and vowed that no Dutch girl should marry with the hated Yankees. Then they took up their pipes and their mugs and began to consider how they should prevent such a horrible catastrophe. The result was that Katrina was shut up in one of those little forts built along the eastern edge of the Dutch colony.

When Jonathan next stole over the border to the trysting place he did not find his love, but a note scribbled in a mixture of Dutch and English telling that she expected to be shut up immediately in the fort. Jonathan went back to his people and told them of his misfortune. They listened to him with occasional interruptions such as "Dew tell!" and "Want 't know," and when he had finished and asked them to help him out of the difficulty they volunteered to a man.

The next day all the Yankees living near Jonathan's home collected, with pikes, matchlocks, scythes and pitchforks, and set out for the fort where Katrina was a prisoner. The approach was over an open field, and the Dutchman on guard in the fort happened to be awake. He raised the alarm, and presently a little six pounder sent a shot over the heads of the advancing Yankees. Jonathan called a halt.

Now, Jonathan did not wish to sacrifice the lives of his friends simply to gain a wife for himself, so he invested the fort, hoping to starve out the garrison. But, whether it was that fear had taken away the Dutchmen's appetite or that the fort was well stored with provisions, the starvation process was a failure. Still there must be a dearth of fresh food, for the Yankees had kept the vendors of perishable property away. Jonathan, true to his Yankee blood, preferred stratagem to bloodshed and concluded to try to reduce the fort by the former method. He withdrew his forces from one of the approaches, a swampy piece of ground, leaving the Dutchmen to suppose that he had been driven off by the mosquitoes. Then he concentrated the principal part of his force behind a barn that had been incautiously left standing quite near the fort.

The next morning the Dutchmen saw a number of women, with baskets on their arms, making their way across the swamp. They came on, chatting among themselves, and when a short distance from the fort sat down their baskets and themselves for a rest. The baskets contained butter and eggs, and the women kept up a clatter, discussing the merits of their produce and what prices they would get for it when they reached the settlement. The sight of the rolls of fresh butter and the white eggs tickled the stomachs of the Dutchmen gaping at them over the parapet of the fort, and it was not long before the women were hailed to know if they would sell and why so many of them were together. They replied that they would sell if they could get as much for their wares as at the settlement and that they were going together for protection from the Indians, whereupon they were invited into the fort. This was part of Jonathan's Yankee trick. He had dressed himself and a dozen of his adherents like Dutchwomen, and each had arms concealed under his feminine apparel. He alone replied to the hail from the fort, for he alone had learned enough Dutch from Katrina to reply and could sufficiently conceal the Yankee nasal twang to prevent being discovered for what he was, though the Dutchmen were not quick at seeing through stratagem and he might well have strained a point. Be this as it may, the gates of the fort were thrown open, and the butter and egg vendors entered.

They had scarcely got inside and set down their baskets when the main Yankee force concealed behind the barn made a rush upon the gates. The Dutchmen were about to run to the assistance of those who were shutting them when they were set upon by the women and either held or driven back, while those coming from without overcame the gatekeepers, and in a few minutes the whole Yankee army was in the fort. A Dutchman is no hand to defend himself against surprise, and those defending the fort surrendered at discretion. Jonathan told them that his only requirement was that Katrina should be permitted to choose between going with him or remaining with them. Katrina was brought forth and chose to go with her Connecticut lover.

Then there was a wedding at which much Holland gin was consumed and a peace. Before leaving the Yankees had sold all the butter and eggs they had with them to the Dutchmen for a good price, but when the latter came to break the eggs they found them to be of white stone, while the butter was painted wood.

EASY TO MIX THIS

Prepare It at Home By Shaking Ingredients Well in a Bottle.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, as formulated by a noted authority, who claims that he has found a positive remedy to cure almost any case of backache or kidney or bladder derangement, in the following simple prescription, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic affections with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache, as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foal acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

It was a tragic scene. Great tears stood in their eyes as they sat upon the cushioned seats of the passenger coach while the train drove rapidly over the rails for the city, sat solemn as a judge presiding over a life or death trial. The lady in dark gentry raised the black veil and wiped away a tear that bedimmed her eye. With dramatic silence a big, burly, handsome fellow sat beside her and six companions in near seats seemed overcome with the strange hypnotic spell. The passengers about grew nervous at the stillness and wondered what could be wrong; one person suggested that it must be a family going to the funeral of a dear one.

The bell clanged out with muffled tones through the dense fog to warn the citizens of the Rose City of the coming of the West Side limited. Boys scattered from the streets scarcely waiting to gather up their marbles and mothers rushed across the track with their go-carts; these however knew nothing of the eight solemnly individuals within. The train came to a sudden halt. "Goodbye," said one, "Farewell," another, "Till we meet again." The show company had stranded on the shoals up the line and had gone to the Rose City to spend the holidays with relatives.

Hundreds More in Forest Grove in the Same Plight

Tired all the time;
Weariness and worn out night and day;
Back aches; side aches,
All on account of the kidneys.
Must help them at their work.

Mrs. A. Whitcomb, living on Edison st., Hillsboro, Oregon, says: "I had been bothered with kidney and bladder trouble for a long time, as a result of this trouble, I endured a great deal of misery. My kidneys were too frequent in action and gave me great annoyance especially at night. As the result for the loss of rest, I would arise in the morning feeling tired and worn out when I attempted to sleep, or if anything, sharp pains would shoot through the small of my back and I would suffer intensely. I took two or three different remedies but did not find relief. At last my attention was drawn to Doan's Kidney Pills, and I procured a box. The pains and aches soon vanished, my kidneys are regular and normal and I have not had a return of any trouble since. I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills very highly."
