THURSDAY, SEPT. 10, 1908

It is now up to "Our George" to square himself with Mary Jane Smith, of Rainier.

It is announced that the Lytle road will be resumed at both ends. Why not begin in the middle and work both ways, too?

The persistent low price of hops, might be overcome by inaugurating a system of "Night Riders," such as has been in vogue in the burly tobacco districts of Kentucky.

The expected never happened. Not this time. Chairman Cake of the Republican committee called the meeting to order in Portland Saturday and proceeded to lay the plans for carrying the state for Taft, and nary a whimper was heard from the Fulton faction. There seemed to be no ground for all the talk that Cake would be asked to resign.

Harriman has come and gone, and he has left a bit of good cheer in the hearts of Oregonians. He should have done this long ago but big bodies move slowly, and Harriman—from the headlines in the papers—is about the biggest body to visit the state since Taft was here. Harriman can afford to give his attention to Oregon and no doubt will so long as Oregon looks good to him.

The first number of the Pacific Grange Bulletin since its consolidation with the Washington state grange paper, has reached this office. For some time there has been an endeavor to consolidate the two state grange papers, for reasons, presumably, that the cost of production would be reduced and that other important advantages would be received by the merger. Vol. 1, and No. 1 for September, as stated, is out and from the standpoint of typographical excellency is about the same as before, but it is far more interesting to the politician perhaps, than it ever was when printed by the Oregon State Grange. Washington of course is now in the midst of a big campaign and the Pacific Bulletin, we venture, has more than its share of political announcements than the general run of papers, but they are all paid advertisements—nobody's business we presume. But understanding the relative position of the patrons of husbandry to politics, as we do, it looks more like it is given over to that principle rather than to the Grange.

Some of the fruit growers of Yamhill county sought to oust the County Fruit Inspector, seemingly because he insisted on the laws being followed, but the county court declined to oust him, and we may now soon hear that Yamhill is free from diseased orchards. Yamhill is in the same category as Washington—and for that matter a great part of the Willamette Valley. There has been lots of good work done in this county by Inspector Harris, but there is lots yet to do before the county will be rid of all diseases of the orchards. There has been no serious kicking by the fruit men—rather it has been their desire to assist in the good work, which means that our county will be freed from pests and the like all the sooner.

Soon Pacific University is to throw open its doors to the students for the next school term. This is an event that is always notable and more or less important to the business activity of Forest Grove. It is notable from the fact that it is one of the best institutions of learning in the entire Northwest, and because it begins another year of the history of the state's earliest pioneer educators. Pacific University owes its origin to Rev. Harvey Clark, who in 1842, as an independent missionary to the Indians, came to what was then known as West Tualatin, now Forest Grove, and the establishment of a school of learning was partially realized by him when the old log cabin was erected on the campus which is now marked by the petrified stump, and with the assistance of Mrs. Tabitha Brown, the now well known Pacific University had its birth. In its infancy it was carefully nursed by its founders and others from "the states" who came afterwards, and in its struggling days some of the most noted men of the Pacific Northwest today are its products.
