To Entertain A Bride

There was busy times in a certain home, in a certain well known town. The carpets were all taken up; the curtains taken down; and every piece of furniture was set outside to air, and all the white clothes in the house were washed and ironed with care. At last this wholesale clean-up was finally perfected, Chi-Namel, used on every floor, the morning light reflected.

And when we came to learn the truth, they were expecting soon an only son and his lovely bride who were on their honeymoon.
A house once varnished with Chi Namel is varnished for a lifetime Chi-Namel is elastic—never cracks nor loses its transparency or brilliancy—all because it is a pure, unadulterated varnish.
All colors and all size packages.
Sold by Mertz and Latta.

"Windy Jim" Discourses

"I was out fishin' with 'Windy Jim' tother dav" said Bill Jenkins, who was holding down 'Windy's' favorite cracker box during the temporary absence of the usual occupant, "And the fish wasn't bitin' much and 'Windy' he got to tellin' 'bout the times he used to have out to Forest Grove." "Funny how he most always tells 'bout Forest Grove, must a kind of subtracted his tenshun or somethin." "Well he got to tellin' of a excurshun what some of the big bugs of Portland was havin' one time an' after they had visited all the little towns around they wound up with Forest Grove" "and there was all the hi-u-mucks of Forest Grove waitin' at the depot with awtee-mow-bills and keriges to show the Portland fellers over town." "And there was a feller named Sextun with a big mule and a funny contrapshun of a home-made cart with big iron wheels to represent the workin-men of the town an' most of the pop-u-lashun was sittin' on the fence tu watch 'em go by." "The first awty-mow-bill was dekerated with flags and banners and things frum the college and looked awful fine." "Well after the perade was been 'round over most of the town they went up to the new K. of P. hall which certainly is a swell place and got a bow. k. and drunk punch and spun yarns and had a good time in general." "They drunk punch cause Forest Grove is a dry town and most of the visitors etc was dry too so that was the most appropriate thing to do." "There was one feller there by the name of F. O. Bristol from New York who is workin' for the Columbia Life and Trust Company what was somethin' swell at story tellin'" "Windy was a sayin'" as how he told a story on a skule marm who laid a couple of eggs on her desk an' then asked the rithmetik class how many eggs there wood be if she laid three more on the floor an' nobody said nothin' so the bad boy of the class says to nother 'say Pete, call her bluff I betcher a dollar she can't do it.'" "Well after the punch was all gone everybody went to the depot and the excurshun went on to Portland."

P. S. "No, they didn't, they stopped off at a little town called Hillsboro, first."
