"Windy Jim"

(By C. E. Dixon)

"Hello Windy! What do ye think of these yere carrots what Farmer Perkins brung tew town, ain't them beautes?" Bill Jenkins held up a magnificent specimen of the carrot tribe admiringly. Windy Jim surveyed it from crown to root and then moved on to the stoye.

"That sack of carrots," continued Bill, "is equal tew pure gold." "How dew ye make thet out Bill?" asked Windy, somewhat puzzled. "Wall," replied Bill, "thars jest twenty-two fine carrots tew the sack, an' if twenty-two carrots fine ain't pure gold I don't know what is."

"Yer all right, Bill, an' that reminds me of watchin' some fellers raisin' parsnips up in Idaho this summer. They hed a big derrick an' when they hed raised a parsnip up about tew feet they would cut off a hunk with a cross-cut saw, an' split 'em up tew the proper commercial size. After they had sawed up a couple of hundred feet offen won big one there cum up a gold nugget bout as big as your head."

"Did they git much of a gold mine, Windy?"

"Gold mine? Naw, the feller what was operatin' the derrick got excited an' let the remainin' part of thet parsnip drop back an' plug up thet hole so as they could'nt git it out again in sixty years, an' thet gold nugget was still stickin' tew the parsnip when it went down."
