"Windy Jim"

(By C. E. Dixon)

The new clerk looked over at Windy Jim with a scowl as the latter deposited a dripping umbrella behind the stove and drew a chair up close among the circle of old timers. "Hello Cy," he said, as he spread out the palms of his hands towards the red-hot coal consumer. "Why, hullo Windy, is it rainy outside?" "Rainy? Wall I reckon so. Reminds me of a time me an' another feller was out in the Yallerstone Park—" "Out whar?" queried Cy Mullins, as he missed the stove hearth with a wad of chewin' gum (the "old timers" had to quit using Star and Horse-shoe when the new clerk came to town.) "Out in the Yallerstone Park yer mutton-head." "Say, Windy, what makes ye allus call me a mutton-head?" "Cause ye look so sheepish, Cy. "Me an' another feller was out thar an' we lowed tew make camp on the 'Continental Divide,' but it got tew dark so we rolled our blankets about tew miles from the top. We didn't roll in 'til after dark cause the meeskeeters were tew thick. Won of 'em set on a log an' I hit him with a four-year-old club 'an drove his bill clean thru the log. Long thru the nite it rained purty hard an' we thought the skeeters would be all in. They were all in tew—in the mud just as we hoped fer—an' every won of 'em hed on a pair of long top rubber boots. "Say, gimme a chew of gum, will ye Cy."
