Six of the seven Lees children were killed in a landslide in India and the parents and their friends have If you are thinking of builderected a magnificent orphanage as a memorial. Here we had heathenism thrown into our faces when Mrs. Lees brought the latest baby for us to see. Its mother is twelve years old. The child is legitimate in that its parents were legally married, although cohabitation is illegal before a wife is fourteen years of age. Another baby that had been rescued from a garbage heap was shown to us. Mrs. Lees asked a policeman why he almost always brought her girls instead of boys. He told her that the keepers of houses of ill fame kept regular nurseries in which they reared the girl babies that they had bought.

On the way from Calcutta we saw camels, elephants, bullocks and other natives at work. The ploughing with bullocks and a wooden plow and the threshing Center of Block rice with a flail looked very Biblical. So did the people carrying things on their heads and so did ine Automatic the Oriental costumes.

Many, many things crowd for utterance, but as our long journey is over I may properly close my journal here. We are well and much needed work lies at our hand so I find myself happy.
