(Continued from first page.) Bank and no complaint was made on account of all the checks being drawn on the one bank.

Not satisfied, the Doctor takes his "muck rake" to dig up the old electric light skeleton that has been allowed to rest for the last two years, with which Mr. Corl never had any connection.

He also speaks of the "old pile of junk in the mountains that used to furnish light for the city," which neither Mr. Corl or anyone else connected with the bank, but myself, ever had any connection. This ought not to cause the Doctor to lose any sleep or have any bad dreams at this time, for this was sold many months ago for fifty thousand dollars to outside parties, as either of the old stockholders here in the city could have told him.

I am reminded of a boy I once knew who had a controversy with another boy on account of a trade of two jack-knives. He thought that the other boy insinuated that he was not on the square and proceeded at once to give him a "drubbing." In a short time when the boys were pretty well bruised up they stopped a moment for breath. The other boy apparently recovering first proceeded, when the boy, beginning to blubber, said, "If you don't stop fighting me I'll spit in the face of every boy who is your friend. It seems that this punishment of all the boys who are friends of Mr. Corl has begun.

I shall not be drawn into any newspaper controversy. I have always been kept busy trying to look after matters that it was my duty to care for.

E. W. HAINES.
