Bourne Denounced by Laborers

Portland, Ore., April 17 (Special)—Nothing in recent years has jarred Oregon so severely from Innaha to Bandon as the unfolding of the true conditions which exist in Senator Bourne's cotton mills in Falls River, Mass. The information received regarding the wage scale, manner in which employees are treated, the tenement houses used as homes and the general squalor that surrounds the people who work in the Bourne mills has caused every true friend of labor in Oregon to rise in righteous wrath against this man who has incessantly preached "Let the people rule" in Oregon, and who has been grinding down the working man in his eastern sweatshop.

Oregon has never known a great deal of Bourne's business career until right now. There was a vague idea that he was a multimillionaire, his wealth having been left him by relatives, and but few people, if any, knew what that wealth consisted of. It now develops that Bourne's enormous income is made from the product of the labors of men who draw all the way from $5 to $12 a week; that children are employed extensively; that old men are held at their posts of duty at a very low wage, and that misery and absolute want abide in many of the homes around the Bourne mills at Fall River.

Probably the senior senator would have continued the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde game indefinitely had not the strikes in Massachusetts called attention to the Bourne mills, and Oregon people, being anxious to know something of the attitude of their senator toward labor, investigated the industrial side of his career.

It is safe to say that laboring men in Oregon, regardless of former opinion, are set against Bourne from now on. His mills are "open shop," his wage scale is too low to insure the necessities of life to employees, hence laboring people of Oregon are now denouncing the senator in terms that have a straight and direct meaning.
