Before the election. "The dear people and may we be your servants." After election. "The people be d-d."

Bills paid News Times Tuesday by our City Council for printing ordinances, month of May, 372 lines at 4c, $14.88. Month of June 186 lines at 4c $7.44. Total $22.32. Our price for this service $11.16.

"Jones pays the freight."

The many and varied reasons and excuses assigned by the several members of the Council for their action in reference to the city printing would make a Chinese puzzle if all grouped and framed for future use. The Press offers any or all Councilmen free use of its columns to put the public right. If the Council would not have its action smack of the dishonesty shown on its face, here is their opportunity.

Injunction was filed by resident property owners on Second Avenue, restraining the Council from letting the paving of that street. Many of the property owners on that street believe that the Council have abused their authority and far overreached the wishes of the majority of owners. The early spring bid fair to much street improvement, but when it was ascertained that the Council favored the Warren Construction Company, regardless of expense, the property owners lost confidence and instead of urging improvement, discouraged any attempt that might be made by them to improve by paving.

For an officer to see a law or ordinance openly violated and take no action is a neglect of duty and such acts would be open to censure if not prosecution. We refer to horses and cows that have been staked on the streets for the purpose of grazing during the past two weeks. We would suggest that part of the ordinance be repealed or enforced. We are informed that only last week widow Via's horse was taken to the pound and $1.00 collected, where 50 cents is the legal charge, for the offense. Of our own personal knowledge the chief of police has passed cows staked on the street, leaving the animals unmolested. We are at a loss to see wherein lies the difference; if one is violation, then why not the other? We are wanting to know what favoritism must be shown to stand with the immune.

Married on Wednesday.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Bunker, when their daughter Clella was married to Mr. Oscar C. Miller at high noon Wednesday, Rev. J. F. Leise officiating.

About thirty guests were present.

After the wedding those present were treated to a bountiful repast.

The young couple will reside on Mr. Miller's farm, north of Hillsboro.

The Forest Grove Press is not the official organ of the city of Forest Grove, as designated by the city council May 31. Our proposition to do the city printing at two cents a line must have offended the city fathers.

PUBLICATION OF SUMMONS.

In the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, for Washington County.
John F. Lee, Plaintiff,

vs.
Mattie J. Lee, Defendant.
To Mattie J. Lee, the above named defendant:

In the name of the State of Oregon, you are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint filed against you, in the above entitled cause, on or before the 3rd day of August 1912, and if you fail so to appear, for want thereof, the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief prayed for in his complaint herein, to wit:

For a decree of this court dissolving the marriage contract now and heretofore existing between plaintiff and defendant, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem equitable herein.

This summons is served upon you by publication in the Forest Grove Press, by order of Hon. J. U. Campbell, Judge of the Fifth Judicial District, of Oregon, made and entered in open court, at Hillsboro, Oregon, on June 17, 1912, which order prescribes the publication of said summons for six successive weeks, the first publication thereof to be on June 20, 1912.

BENTON BOWMAN,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

"No! You owe me nothing, and I want no favors from you." They both rose, Mrs. Gilbert facing him with a laugh in her eyes. "So be it," she said pleasantly. "I must accept your hostility. You pay me a fine compliment, Mr. McAdoo. The truth is you're jealous—jealous as a schoolgirl, Mr. McAdoo. And afraid of me. I can be a very dangerous enemy—if I choose. If I should choose to accept your challenge and to take away from you your dearest possession—your happiness, Mr. McAdoo—you would be helpless to prevent it. You have no weapons to fight me. And you know it. Else why are you here today?" She laughed. "I wish to God," he cried bitterly, "I had let you die in the mills!" Smiling, she watched him turn and leave her. Then she sat down before the fire, looking into its flames with amused eyes. The gleam of amusement faded into reflectiveness, reflectiveness into wistfulness. She sighed.

CHAPTER XIV.

SANGER'S OFFER.

LATE in the evening a few days after his call on Mrs. Gilbert Bob returned home from a hard day's work. The election was only a month away, and the campaign was in full swing. There had been little in the reports to annoy him. His organization was intact, working like the well oiled machine it was. Reports from the enemy's camp gave further cause for satisfaction. The independent Democratic candidate was not making the headway expected. Yet Bob went home disturbed in mind. The day had been passed among men who were devoting their time and energy in his interest. But through all their conferences he had been conscious of an unaccounted, oppressive sense of loneliness, and he had not seen Remington since their interview in his office.

When he entered the house he saw Kathleen sitting in the library sewing. She looked up with a bright smile as he hesitated before the door.

"May I come in?" he queried as though not quite sure of his welcome. "Since when this timidity?" she laughed. "Of course, come in. I was just thinking about you. Mother was bewailing today that we don't see much of you now the campaign has started."

"Well," he looked at his watch, "if it won't make you sleepy, I'll let you administer your company for half an hour."

"You speak as though my company were bad medicine!"

But before he could answer the door-bell rang. He frowned.

"I had forgotten," he exclaimed regretfully. "I have an appointment with Sanger at 10."

Kathleen gathered up her sewing and arose. He looked at her doubtfully.

"If you don't mind, I wish you'd stay. It may be just as well to have a third person present."

"But Mr. Sanger may not like it," she objected hesitatingly.

"Mr. Sanger may like it or not," Bob observed carelessly. "Sit down."

He went to the door himself and let Sanger in. A minute later the two men entered the library. Kathleen saw a tall man in evening dress, who bore himself with an air of quiet confidence.

"Miss Flinn," Bob introduced him, "this is Mr. Sanger. He's my immediate enemy just now."

Sanger bowed genially and laughed. "A very friendly enemy just at present."

"I am very glad to meet one of our enemies—especially if he be friendly," she smiled. "Won't you sit down, Mr. Sanger?"

Sanger looked inquiringly at Kathleen.

"Miss Flinn will be present," Bob answered the look, "at my request."

Sanger reclined comfortably in his chair and placed his hands together, finger tip accurately meeting finger tip.

"Circumstances of which I am perhaps the victim," he began, "make it necessary for me to take an active part for the future in our local and state politics."

"Haven't you already been somewhat active?"

Sanger waved his hand carelessly. "Tentatively, tentatively only, Mr. McAdoo. Hereafter I propose to be more active and to better effect. I hope. Certain ventures in which I am interested, individually and in connection with other large investors of our state, make this imperative. Unfortunately in the present campaign I find myself compelled to oppose your election. I regret it exceedingly, and, frankly, I'm here to propose that we work in harmony in the future."

"That comes rather late."

"Please don't refuse until you have heard me out. Allow me to explain our position. For several years certain gentlemen, all large investors, have kept William Murchell in power in this state at considerable expense to ourselves. In return we had the right to demand protection for our interests. Murchell, however, has of late proved very ungrateful. He has passed under the influence of John Dunmeade. Dunmeade, Mr. McAdoo, is a dangerous man, an utter radical, an impracticable dreamer, a man of socialistic tendencies. His influence in our politics is a menace to individual property rights. My dislike of Dunmeade is only political. His wife is my cousin. I myself never allow personal considerations to influence business policy. We are determined that Murchell and Dunmeade must go out of politics completely."

"Humph! How are you going to do it?"

Sanger smiled confidently. "We shall find the means. Two years from now a new governor, legislature and United States senator must be elected. They must be absolutely independent of Murchell and Dunmeade."

"But not independent of you?"

"Precisely. Which brings me to your case. Permit me to say, Mr. McAdoo, I have a deep admiration for you. You have a remarkable genius for politics. You can be very useful to us, and we can be very useful to you. If you are elected, which is by no means assured, the city organization will be absolutely under your control. With this city and our share of the country districts and Adelpia, which you must admit we already control, we are certain of setting Murchell and Cousin Dunmeade aside. I suggest," he concluded, "that you come in with us."

"Purely out of philanthropic belief in the sanctity of individual property rights, I suppose?"

"Not at all. We don't demand disinterested motives. In fact, we should suspect the sincerity of such motives if alleged. We expect to make it worth your while. We will, to begin with, contribute liberally to your campaign funds."

"As liberally as you have already contributed to Harland's fund?"

"You are well informed," Sanger said, his face betraying surprise.

"It's my business to be well informed."

Sanger eyed Bob narrowly before continuing. "That proves the propriety of my next suggestion. We will put you in Murchell's place as state leader." Kathleen started, her work arrested.

"Upon the condition, of course, that you will secure us the protection and legislation we desire," Sanger continued. "And as a guarantee of our good faith we will consent to your friend Remington as next governor."

"Consent? I thought you were to make me boss."

"Of course we should have to be consulted in all important nominations."

"Then you don't propose to give me the free hand you gave Murchell?"

"Frankly, no. We can't take that risk again with any man."

(To be continued.)

The Christian Church should be crowded Monday evening.
