Athletics For All But Too Much For None

O. A. C. Corvallis, Nov. 7.—Better bodies for all young men and physical fitness for the strain of military hardships and the big inter-collegiate games, are the aims of the athletics required of students here.

The big and over-developed huskies that need no "building" are no longer grabbed up on their first appearance on the campus and given the "too-much" treatment necessary to "win the game." Instead every man is given a special examination to find out what he most needs and then the kind of drill that develops it, and assigned to play with his colleagues the game he likes and needs. If defective in bodily vigor he is given special corrective exercises. Two hundred men are now taking corrective exercises.

The foundation games not only strengthen the body and clear the mind, but incidentally disclose the special athletic qualities, if any, that each man has. He is then graduated naturally into those inter-collegiate sports that he is best fitted for, where he is in position to do the best for the school and to do it with the least strain and injury to himself. The military value of this work is seen in the success of the French in capturing one of the strongest forts on the western front almost without the loss of a man, after having "re-hearsed" for the exploits for many weeks.

This work is directed by the department of Physical Educational men, in charge of Dr. A. D. Browne, who has succeeded in getting the whole school to playing. Co-operating with him are the departments of Health, the Military, and the inter-collegiate sports under Coach Jos. A. Pipal.
