Frisbie, in the eastern part of the city and Monday showed the editor a letter from her son, Lowell, who is in the navy. At the time of writing (Nov. 28th) Lowell was aboard the U. S. S. Pueblo, (location not given) He has been thru the Panama canal, to Bahia, Brazil; Montevideo, Uruguay; Buenos Ayres, Argentina, and many other points of interest in the south seas, and says he is feeling first rate and has a rather easy time of it. He sent to his mother a novel picture of him self, so arranged that when the card is bent a little the expression of his face changes from melancholy to happiness and vice versa. When Lowell lived in this city he was a little tad and looked not at all like the husky sailor his picture shows him to be.

Portland Oregonian Endorses Italian Film

In point of scenic grandeur and actual dramatic episode the Italian Battlefront War Pictures produced genuine thrills and moved huge audiences at the Heilig yesterday to continual bursts applause. Whatever praise has been heard of these films is fully justified.

Besides the grace and value of being genuine depictions of actual happenings in the Italian battlefront, and the only pictures authorized and photographed and sent out by the Italian government, these pictures possess the unusual feature of pleasing the artistic sense, a feature hitherto untouched in war pictures. The pictures are authentic, and are owned by the Italian government.

Many stirring scenes are shown in the snow-clad Alps, with the Italian Alpine soldiers in vigorous battle with the Austrians, giving glimpses of actual warfare. One impressive picture shows the capture of 15,000 ill-clothed, gaunt, half-starved looking Austrians, and their prison life. An interesting feature in these pictures is the aeroplane maneuvers and detailed showing of airplanes, while dropping bombs.

Another exciting portion of the picture shows the actual sinking of an Austrian submarine at the conclusion of the battle of Gorizia, in which the Italians were victorious in capturing that city from the Austrians. In filming the incidents in this picture eight photographers were killed.

Italians in the ice trenches, battle on skis, fighting in the ice-clad mountains and the amazing work with their cannon and guns amidst the snow and ice makes an unforgettable picture, and is of positive educational value. One of the pictures which roused the audience to enthusiasm was the medal decoration of the young 19-year-old Italian commander, Baruzzi, who, with only four men to help him, captured 200 Austrians in their trenches.

Another picture that brought applause showed the democratic King of Italy conferring with his men in the trenches and another picture was the year-old Prince of Italy. Various Italian diplomats and representative men of the country are in evidence in the pictures—Portland Oregonian, Jan. 4th, 1918.

This sensational war picture will be at the Star Theater, Saturday of this week, afternoon and evening. See display ad for particulars.
