EACH DAY

Each day I scan the columns long
Where names of heroes shine,
Half fearful lest my eyes shall find
The name I bear as mine.

Each day I know some mother's heart
Has cried out in her breast
The name she dared not speak aloud—
Too sacred is his rest.

Each day I wait as others do
And pray with every breath
For strength to know that come what may,
In faith there is no death.

—MRS. NATHAN HARRIS.

SOME OLD TIME REMINISCENCES

Sixty-three years ago this summer was the year when the big forest fire took place in the hills and mountains west and no town west of town. Uncle Joe Thrap, who was then a boy, tells that the season was dry, and the atmosphere was so dense that candles were used in the daytime. It was in the midst of huckleberry time, and many Klickitat Indians had come over to get berries. The poor savages were hemmed in by the fire, and forced to take to a small mountain lake and remain in the water until the fire died down. It was so hot for them at times that they took mud from the lake bottom and smeared over parts of their body out of the water. Wild animals ran hither and yon to escape. An old squaw saw a bear with the hair burned from his body. Thrap's were then living on the D. L. C. of 400 acres that Uncle Joe's father took up. The family are residing on and working the old farm today.—Willamina Times.

Coyotes "Pass On"

Down at Beaverton Thursday evening while Earl E. Fisher was hoeing potatoes on his place one mile west of town, three coyotes passed along the clearing just above the Beavertown. Fisher started over to greet the travelers, but the "East Mountain Songsters" didn't have time to visit.

HEMLOCK KILLS MANY CATTLE

"So that's poison hemlock? Well, I'll follow your suggestion and fence off the poison infested area," said a Western Oregon stockman to Prof. W. E. Lawrence, who is making a special study of poison plants and their control in Oregon.

The Douglas water hemlock occasions the greatest amount of poisoning in Western Oregon, while the plant known as the Oregon water hemlock is the most numerous and deadly in Eastern Oregon. In both districts the stockmen will find that by fencing off the poison areas, or by keeping the stock from the pasture containing them when poisoning occurs, the cases of poisoning will be greatly reduced. Stockmen in Eastern Oregon are generally familiar with the hemlock, and many of them dig out the roots.

It is only the roots that are poisonous, and poisoning seems to result when the stock pull out the plant and get hold of the roots while grazing.

The Western Oregon plant is found only in lands that are wet the year round, while the Eastern Oregon plant grows on swamp lands that may dry up in summer. Stockmen are urged to look out for the plants in both sections, and send specimens with account of losses to Prof. Lawrence, at O. A. C., Corvallis. Both species have a cluster of small white blossoms not unlike those of the pansy. The College will help identify the plants and send special directions on inquiry.

H. E. Inow, city school superintendent, came over from Clatsop Friday to attend a meeting of the board of education. Mr. Inow is spending his vacation running a store at Clatsop for a spruce contractor, and Mrs. Inow and the children are living at Clatsop with him.

Want Help or a Job?

If there are any farmers or fruit growers in this section who need help, they may secure same by applying to R. W. Reder, secretary of the Forest Grove Commercial club. Phone 751.

Men, women and children who desire work on the farms or in the orchards are also invited to register with Mr. Reder. There is no charge for this service, only a desire to get the work and workers together in order that food may be saved for the nation and its overseas forces.

Notice

All citizens of the City of Forest Grove are urged to cut and remove all grass, weeds and other rubbish from their lots and parking strips. During these dry days there is great danger of fire and I strongly urge all of you to use every means possible to prevent the origin and spread of wasteful fires.
