The Boy From Next Door

YOU used to see him swing gaily down the street, radiant with the vigor of his sturdy young manhood. One day he came home in khaki; then his father told you, with mingled pride and foreboding, that he had "gone across" with his regiment.

Yesterday his name was on the casualty list—"slightly wounded"—and your face grew grave as you thought of the sorrow and suspense of his father and mother.

From every city street, every village, every community, the boy next door has gone to war.

Think of these thousands of splendid young Americans, reared in comfort, peace, and security, now suddenly plunged into that roaring inferno of battle with the hardened hordes of a desperately determined foe.

What are you doing to help them?

What are you doing to arm and protect them, and bring them home in safety? Have you bought Liberty Bonds? Have you bought all you possibly can?

Has it occurred to you that one more Bond, bought with a little additional effort, may save the life of the boy from the next door?

Plans for County Farm

The county court during the week has devoted much time to consideration of plans for meeting the emergency caused by the burning of the building. The six inmates are at the Tualatin hotel, but the court wishes to make other arrangements as soon as possible. Before making any new plans the court investigated the suggestion made at budget meetings and elsewhere that persons sent to the institution could be cared for more economically by boarding them at the Multnomah county poor farm and disposing of the county plant. It was found, however, that Multnomah would charge something over $200 per month for the present number of inmates, and with the average number cared for in past years the expense would be more than $5000 per year.

Plans under consideration at present involve a possible sale of a portion of the present farm, retaining only what land is necessary, and by adding the sale price to the insurance creating a fund sufficient to replace the burned building immediately with one on plans drawn that will provide addition when necessary. Another plan under consideration is the sale of the present farm outright and purchase of a smaller place which is available and on which there is a building which will meet present needs. No decision has yet been reached, but the opinion of the court appears to be that a temporary expedient would be unwise even under present conditions, and anything done should be of a permanent nature. The insurance was $3500, of which $700 was on the furniture and fixtures.—Independent.

How Fire Caught

The mystery surrounding the poor house fire was cleared up Saturday morning when it was discovered that the remains of John Rheinberger were under the building. His bones were found under the wire mattress of the bed on which Supt. Gardner slept, showing that Rheinberger had crept from his upstairs room to the ground floor, had gone out of doors, perhaps with his clothing afire, and had crept under the building directly under the superintendent's room. His cane was found a few feet away, and this was with him when he retired.

It is now positively certain that Rheinberger had ignited bedclothes in his room and had fled when the flames became too hot for him.

The remains of Rudolf (Adolph) Strach were found under his room, showing that he had suffocated and perished in his own apartment. Supt. Gardner said that Rheinberger had been in the habit of smoking at night, and he had taken his tobacco away from him evenings. The old chap,
