Forty Feet by a Rope.

The Journal's item regarding a shepherd dog who was saved from a dry well by clinging with his teeth to a rope lowered him leads a correspondent to send the following story: A kitten had fallen into one of the ventilating flues in the walls of the postoffice building of Boston, and had been incarcerated five days without food or water. The flue referred to is forty feet in depth, from the ceiling level of the apartment. Notice of the kitten's misfortune was brought to Architect G. J. F. Bryant late of a Saturday afternoon. The cries of the kitten could be faintly heard, and Mr. Bryant's first impulse was to cut through the marble facing of the apartment in which the flue was located; but a suggestion being made that perhaps the prisoner, in its desperation, might seize the end of a line weighted and of bulky shape at its lower end, this experiment was tried. Strange to say, the nearly starved creature almost instantly took fast hold with its claws, when it was very carefully and slowly drawn safely up the entire height of forty feet and safely delivered. No southern razor-back pig was ever thinner than this liberated little kitten; yet with warm milk administered at intervals, restoration soon took place.—Boston Journal.

CHINA REMINDS MR. DUDLEY OF THE MICHIGAN CAVALRYMEN.

Dr. Longstaff recently read a paper before the Royal Statistical Society, of Great Britain on the subject of rural depopulation. According to his observations the universal tendency of the times is a removal from the country to villages or cities. No more men and women, he says, will remain attached to the soil than are absolutely required in each place for its cultivation in the way found to be most remunerative for that place. He might have added that the introduction of agricultural machinery on farms of great area has reduced the demand for manual labor for a given product, and has helped to depopulate rural regions near great cities where the high cost of land and the inability to apply broad methods to agriculture makes farming unprofitable. The tendency is very noticable in this country, notwithstanding the great and continuous tide of immigration directed mainly to the agricultural lands of the West. The census of 1890 shows an actual decrease in the population of 455 counties, chiefly in New England, New York, Northern New Jersey, Tennessee, Kentucky, Southern Michigan, Wisconsin, Eastern Iowa and the mining counties of Colorado, Nevada and California. The losses in mining districts are due to the working out of mines; in the agricultural states to migration to cheaper and better lands, and in the eastern states to the working out of farm lands, the growth of manufacturing and the disposition of the farm lands to crowd into the cities, where there is kind of a lottery of labor, the rewards being less sure, but sometimes much greater than to agricultural labor. The changes are going on continuously. The broad plains are first occupied by a sparse population living freely on the products of their own soil and having few trade relations. The next stage is one of agriculture and trade, in which villages and towns begin to appear, and then follows a decadence of agriculture, with temporary losses of population to large districts, as the farming class migrates to new states or removes to the city. Then very often follows a new stage of growth, when manufactures become established, and mechanics and mill hands come to take the place of the farmers in the count of population. Always, however, the towns and cities are growing at the expense of the adjacent farming districts. The farm boy and the farm girl, living within the influences of a great city, and noting the wealth of its inhabitants become dissatisfied with their hard life of toil, and naturally desire to change it for one of greater comforts and greater rewards.

ALISON SPEAKS.

Senator Allison, of Iowa, one of the commissioners to the monetary conference, spoke on Saturday last in favor of the repeal of the Sherman silver purchase law. He said he voted for the law of 1890 with great hesitation, for he did not believe in the policy of piling up bullion in the treasury and holding it there unused. He favored coining every dollar of silver in the treasury as soon as practicable. He favored use of the $60,000,000 seigniorage now in the United States could not continue to purchase silver without seriously endangering the standard established in 1873, and bringing the nation, with all its opportunities, wealth, labor and production to a silver standard. Allison was questioned about the recent monetary conference at Brussels. He said the Brussels conference made more progress respecting the solution of the silver question than was made at all the prior conferences. If the United States would undertake a policy restoring silver by international arrangement, it would be accomplished within a reasonable time, the parity between the two metals would be restored, and silver would practically be rehabilitated. That was the solution of the question. Hill of New York asked whether the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act would facilitate or hinder perfection of such an international agreement, and Allison replied that that was only a matter of judgment. George of Mississippi asked whether there was any sentiment in Europe in favor of reestablishing the monetary conference. Allison had no doubt that the public opinion of Europe was that a conference of a nation should be assembled to deal with the question, and in that statement he did not exclude England. He believed if patience were exercised, if the question were dealt with in a statesmanlike way, if senators would dismiss from their minds all prejudices and party feelings and deal with the problem as a question involving the whole country, its integrity and its interest, the time would soon come when gold and silver would travel side by side.

THE VALLEY OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The general merchandise store of Watts & Price, at Seaside, in Columbia county, was burglarized last week. Entrance was effected by the prying open the front doors. The cash till in the store and the stamp drawer in the postoffice were rifled. Fortunately all money had been removed, and a few dollars' worth of stamps was all that was taken. The burglars drilled a hole into the safe but for some reason did not blow it open. The articles taken from the store were principally cutlery, men's clothes, handkerchiefs, and other small articles, such as could be easily carried away. The total loss is estimated at $150.
The valiant New York World, which a year ago urged workmen to "vote in good times" and "send tariff robbers to the rear," now says to the working multitudes: "Eat rice; it is good, wholesome food and is cheap." The World also is calling upon the humane for "bread to keep workmen from starving." It is very kind in the World, but it would have been still greater kindness had it not aided in bringing about the very misfortune it is now trying to alleviate temporarily.—Inter-Ocean.

THE HAWAIIAN QUESTION.

Dispatches from Washington, in addition to announcing the appointment of A. S. Willis, of Kentucky, as minister to Hawaii, assert that it will be the policy of the Cleveland administration to create a protectorate, mild in its terms as to internal affairs but very rigid against outside interference, and that the United States will guarantee any permanent government established by the vote of the people of Hawaii against overthrow by revolution.
Herein we may trace the fine hand of that combination seemingly so dear to President Cleveland—the sugar ring. Matters having been held in abeyance long enough to permit the sugar magnates to complete its combinations, the administration now announces its purpose of preserving the status and of maintaining a protectorate over the Hawaiian islands which shall prevent the people of that nation from offering the sovereignty of the islands to any foreign nation.
It will be in vain to search the constitution of the United States for any warrant, express or implied, for the establishment of a protectorate, mild or otherwise, over a foreign jurisdiction. If, as in the case of Texas, an independent nation wishes to link her fate with ours, and to surrender her sovereignty in order to become an integral part of the American republic, well and good, but when the United States undertakes to assume the role of guardian and protector for a foreign nation, that is clearly a very different question.
If Hawaii wants to cede itself to the United States, we may accept the offer or decline it, as seems the more expedient for us, but the creation of a protectorate is quite another matter. Against whom are the people of Hawaii to be protected? Not against the nations of Europe, for no one of them really wants Hawaii. Are they, then, to be protected against themselves, and if so, what becomes of the right of revolution? Unless we accept Hawaii's offer of annexation, we have no business to mix or meddle in her politics, and that is the conclusion which Mr. Cleveland would have reached had he been left alone by the sugar ring. Possibly he does not understand the situation, though it is plain enough for any one to see, but if he does understand it he must be set down as catering to the interests of one of the greatest and most grasping monopolies in the United States.—San Francisco Chronicle.

For the Young Doctors.

During my second year at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, I had a classmate whom it would be uncharitable to call a dullard. One of the professors was in the habit of taking the boys unawares and quizzing them. He said to this fellow one day:
"How much is a dose of—" giving the technical name of cotton oil. "A teaspoonful," was the ready reply.
The professor made no comment, and the fellow soon realized that he had made a mistake. After a quarter of an hour, he said:
"Professor, I want to change my answer to that question."
"It's too late Mr. —," responded the professor, looking at his watch. "Your patient's been dead fourteen minutes."—Correspondent New York World.

WHERE GUILTEAU LIES.

Deputy Warden Ross of the district jail makes a statement that the skeleton of Gulteau, the assassin of President Garfield, is not on exhibition at the medical museum, as has been generally supposed.
It will be remembered that for a long time prior to the execution strenuous efforts were made to ascertain where Gulteau was to be buried. Persons acting in the interest of resurrectionists, both those who wanted the body for dissection and several enterprising proprietors who much desired to secure it for exhibition purposes, industriously questioned every one whom they thought possessed the slightest knowledge. Great precautions were taken to prevent the grave from being robbed. The following mode of procedure was agreed upon to prevent the body from being stolen. In order to obviate whatever legal difficulties might arise and to forestall any claim the sister or brother of the murderer might make, it was decided that he should make a will bequeathing his body to Dr. Hicks, and it will probably be remembered that the will when published created some curiosity by its wording, giving as it did the body to be disposed of as the beneficiary saw fit.
"After going over the whole matter," said Warden Ross, "and realizing that it would be impossible to properly protect the corpse, it was decided to bury it in the jail the night of the hanging. After the autopsy the body remained in a cheap coffin in the chapel of the jail. Upon my arrival at the jail early on Saturday morning following the execution, I secured a couple of trustees and taking them with me proceeded to the laundry room. It is a little room just to the east of the engine-room, dimly lighted by a small barred grating, and it made almost an ideal tomb."
"Two amateur grave-diggers went to work, and quickly removing the flooring, dug a grave sufficiently deep by the time the body was brought down from the chapel.
"There was only a small party that stood about that open grave and listened to the solemn reading of the burial service. General Crocker, who was the warden, was present, and I believe Charley Reed, the lawyer who assisted in Gulteau's defense, besides several guards and the two prisoners who dug the grave. It was a weird scene, and one I shall never forget. The burial in such a somber place was particularly nerve-straining, and I think we all felt relieved when Dr. Hicks concluded and the darkies began to cover up the coffin. This did not consume much time, and it was not long before the grave was filled up and the flooring restored to its normal position.
"There was no particular compact as to secrecy among us, but it seemed to be generally understood that we would maintain silence, especially as there was considerable excitement at the time. The story that the body had been secretly removed to the medical museum was permitted to go uncontradicted, just as I state, because we did not believe it concerned any one.
"What became of the brains and other organs of the assassin which were removed at the autopsy held immediately after the execution I do not know, except the spleen, which is on exhibition at the museum. Whatever else was left of the man who murdered President Garfield lies beneath the floor of the laundry-room of the jail."
