The residence of John Thomp on went down into the stove, scattering the ashes in a lively manner. Several of the occupants of the house were in at the time and received a light shock, but some ladies standing in Mr. Chessman's across the street rereived a heavier shock than those in Mr. Thompson's house. The only damage done to the house was to knock a few bricks off the chimney. The Dalles Chronicle reports that the Columbia flood is just washing the base of Vic Trevitt's monument on Memeluse island, situated in the middle of the Columbia river a few miles below The Dalles. The island is a desolate dot of sand and rock in the river that has from time immemburial place. Trevitt is the only white man buried on the island. In this connection, remarks the paper juoted above, and as a pointer to previous floods in the Columbia, we an add that the skulls and bones from the Indian burying ground, on the Memeluse island at the foot of the rapids, are washing away.
