THE MILITIA AND THE PEACE.

In the United States outside the cities, the executive government consists chiefly of the sheriff. He is not expected to prevent isolated acts of crime but it is his duty to see that there is no general disturbance of the peace. Unless he is incompetent there can be no such disturbance in any case where the majority of the people are law abiding.

In cases where the majority are not law abiding the sheriff will not receive the local support which the law supposes will be given him in every law abiding community. In such an event it is his duty to call on the governor for help, and unless the governor knows positively that such help is not needed it is his duty to order out the militia.

Of late there has been considerable controversy between certain more or less uncertain officials on what seem to be very plain points.

The principals of the civil organization of every state in the Union is that the county is not to do for the township anything which the township can do as well for itself. Nor is the state to do for the county or the government for the state what can be as well done locally.

Unless this theory of government is reliable in practice, we have no reliable government in the United States, for it is everywhere the assumption that the people of the minor political organization from the township upwards are able to take care of themselves and can take care of themselves the best with the minimum of outside interference.

If this makes a weak government, then government everywhere in the United States is necessarily a weak affair, for it is based on this presumption of local capacity for self government, and this presumption must be overcome before outside assistance in government can be rendered.

The incalculable advantage of this system over all others is that as far as it proves practicable it allows millions of people to live together, organizing for efficient co-operation, industrial and political, with a maximum of helpfulness, and a maximum of perniciousness, because ignorant, interference in each other's affairs.

The disadvantage of the system becomes apparent when a community shows itself unable to govern itself and keep the peace. This disadvantage it is proposed to overcome by giving to such a community the help of every other community which is still competent for self government.

Such help cannot be consistently rendered until the presumption of competency for self government in the community for which the help is demanded has been overcome. It is officially overcome, at least on the face of things, when the sheriff announces that he is powerless and calls for militia.

Such a call means, if he is telling the truth, that he has exhausted his resources; that he has endeavored to call out all law abiding citizens as his posse and that there are not law abiding citizens enougn under his jurisdiction to enable him to keep the peace.

Whenever this is true, such a sheriff should promptly have the help of the state militia, and, if necessary, of the United States army. The success of the entire scheme depends on massing a sufficient force to keep the peace at any point where incapacity for self government is manifested.—Telephone-Register.

ALICE PORTER, Teacher.

"The piano responds almost like a living thing to the care given to it," said Edward H. Hanley, a salesman for a large piano manufactory, "and it is barely possible that a few hints regarding their care may be acceptable to some of the owners of instruments in this city. Variations in temperature affect the delicate works so decidedly that the corner of the room farthest from the register or stove should be chosen for its abiding place, and if possible the keyboard should be turned away from the source of heat. It is not necessary to close the lid every night, and in fact, no piano should remain closed for months at a time, as is often the case. On closing the house for the summer vacation always see that the inside of the case is dusted carefully, and before shutting it spread several layers of paper over the wires to absorb any dampness that may gather. The duster should be a piece of soft old silk or cheesecloth, and never dampened for use."

OVER THE STATE.

A body buried in a Salem cemetery ten years ago was exhumed last week. The burial casket was of metal, and had preserved the cadaver perfectly.

Josephine county has the only survivor of the war of 1812 who draws a pension, on this coast—Hosea Brown, of Wilderville, who was born in Westmoreland county, New York, in 1792. Of the old soldier, the San Francisco agent writes: "Mr. Brown is the only survivor of the war of 1812 on our rolls, and one of the few survivors now living, and we feel very kindly toward him, always looking for his voucher and remitting the amount promptly. We should like to have a photograph of him if possible."

The Eugene Register says the people of that neighborhood now realize more fully than ever before the needs of a river service. Cities depending entirely on railroads for transportation facilities are experiencing famine on many necessaries, and at this time, when fruit requires immediate attention in preserving or shipping the loss is heavy. Eugene would be all right with a river service, and both the steamer and railroad are not likely to tie up at the same time.

The price of board for students in the dormitory at Eugene is $2.50 per week.

McKune & Co. will erect a stamp mill this summer on their ore vein in the Blue River mining districts, fifty miles from Eugene. "If their venture proves as successful as they anticipate," says the Oregon City Courier, "Postmaster R. S. Green, Mayor Straight and other persons interested in the mine close by will be thousands of dollars ahead."
