The legend which the big bridge is to bear will be repeated dozens of times, in letters from 5 to 20 feet high, all along the water fronts of the two rivers All the steamship companies, big and little, from the ocean liners to the craft that ply between ports on the sound and the Hudson, have made preparations for illuminating their ships to an extent never before dreamed of except by the practical men whose life study is the possibilities of electricity. The effect of these on the water night will be on a large scale what the

On land there will be a daylight display which has never been equaled in New York or any other city. The great metropolis will be fairly swathed in red, white and blue bunting. From every point where a staff can be stuck out of the hig mercantile houses is planning Its own scheme of decoration, and the smaller ones as well. People who visited New York soon after the battle of Santiago were astonished at the lavish display of bunting, but this display is to be eclipsed when Dewey comes home. opened a central bureau in Union square, where persons crowded out of the hotels were sent and quarters se lected for them according to their ideas of economy and convenience. The same plan is to be carried out at the Dewey celebration. It is the opinion of James H. Breslin that if 1,000, 000 persons have to remain in New York overnight during the Dewey fee tivities New York can take care of them. There would necessarily be a good deal of "doubling up." but Mr. Breslin thinks the city botels, re-en-thip, could handle such a multitude. It must be remembered that every day in the year 100,000 people arrive in and leave New York without creating a ruffle on the surface of things. But the visitor to Gotham must ex-

He will see sights worth looking at, however, and when he finds himself in the center of acres of densely packed humanity two blocks from the line of parade be may console himself by the reflection that he is doing his part toward making Dewey's welcome home the most impressive spectacle with which the nation has ever honored one of its citizens.
