THE IVORY QUEEN A Detective Story of a Chicago Suburb. The Murder at The Grange and How Its Mystery Was Solved by Darront, the American Legat.

"You're not condemned yet," he could answer. "You're only arrested on suspicion. If you can prove me guilty..."

"My dear sir, you are talking wildly. The law has no desire to bring you to the scaffold if you are innocent..."

"Then, if you are and can put me on the track of the guilty party, so much the better," Darront replied, seating himself and preparing to listen to the lawyer's defense...

"Well," he returned, to The Grange, and he welcomed me. "I returned to the library and stood on the left hand side of the fireplace..."

"Go on, hang me! You mean to let me go?" Darront asked. "You quarrelled again. Old men always get back to the same topic, and I brought you back..."

"You would not have reached New York," he said. "You mean I have been watched?" "I was dazed when Dobson showed me the paper. It took all the life out of me..."

In half an hour the arrest of the Norwegian murderer was known all over Chicago. The papers came out with extra and sensational headlines...

TWO SIDES OF THE BOER QUESTION.

The expression of American opinion on the Transvaal struggle is abundant and full of interest; but an unusual hesitation is shown by pronouncing final judgment...

The preliminary police court proceedings filled more columns. The great trial was given week-in-week after day, and all the while louder and louder swelled the chorus that sang the praises of that prince of all detectives, Herbert Darront.

THE PATH OF ASTRAY MARDEN. The last day of the trial of Astray Marsden for the murder of his unclesome of the Chicago evening papers contained the following:

Like all others in the building, carried away by the suppressed excitement of the moment, they held their breath and waited. The minute hand of the clock slowly travels to the hour of 10. One by one the lawyers enter and take their seats...

"The monotone voice of the court crier demands silence, and the indistinguishable murmur inaudible from a body of people overwhelmed with intense excitement subsides. Astray Marsden, sitting under his attorney's table, where she has sat throughout the trial, looks toward the court...

"I was blind with rage. I did not know where I was walking. I walked for miles. Then the snow came down, and I took shelter in a shed and when the storm was over went back to the village hotel..."

"The evidence that has been placed before you, gentlemen, is, with one exception, but that is a fearful exception, of a purely circumstantial character..."

alien and have built forts around Johannesburg. It is because their country four years ago was invaded by armed men under Dr. Jameson...

At the last session of the legislature a registration law was passed which provides that every voter must register between the 1st Monday in January 1900 and 5 o'clock p. m. May 15...

The actual and precise place of residence of the elector at the time of his registering will be asked, and the precinct, and if in the country, the section, township and range...

The law is very explicit, and enters into the smallest details, until after a person has gone through the process of registering he will think he is under suspicion for murder...

For those who for any reason cannot go to the county clerk for registration, the law enables them to settle the matter with a notary public or justice of the peace...
