PLAN OF A HOGHOUSE.

Some Points of a Hoghouse in General Use in Maryland. The plan of a hoghouse in use at the Maryland station is given by Director Patterson in a recent bulletin with the following explanation: Most of the plans for hoghouses referred to in literature on this subject refer to those made farther north or west where the climate is more severe than in this latitude. ...

SUGAR BEET PULP.

One of the Features Which Recommend the Sugar Beet Industry. Among points about feeding beet pulp which a Nebraska cattle man determined by experiment were: First—That the cattle would eat as much as 100 pounds of pulp a day. ...

Of a brushy marsh for summer and a square made of a few old fence rails with some pine brush or corn fodder thrown over the top for winter. The hoghouse of the north may suit that latitude, but no doubt could be improved upon for that section, and it certainly has many objections for the south, generally the greatest objection being the cost. ...

It attaches the greatest possible importance in value to the use of beet pulp in beef production and does not doubt it will prove equally valuable in the dairy industry. ...

Another Nebraska stockman gives his experience thus: I fed 200 3 and 4 year old western steers in 1891, the first year our factory opened. ...

Fourth—Ease with which manure can be removed. Fifth—Swinging gates close the pigs into their beds while the manure is being loaded. ...

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, GOVERNOR

Theodore Roosevelt's career is a practical experiment in politics. He is aiming at success. If he were content to be good, he would not stand out among the honest men who are known in political life, but who for the most part maintain the personal purity by holding aloof and exerting only so much influence as is possible by arousing or directing public opinion. ...

When he returned from Cuba, the old question arose in no very new form. Should he stand out with the comparatively few so-called independents and fight everything, or should he join with the machine and as Governor do things? ...

Well, for example,—about that time the two big Wall Street men were quarreling, and one of them in a huff got some information about a trust company his rival had a remote interest in. ...

Nearly sixty years ago Thomas H. Benton sounded a note of alarm in the face of what seems harmless and even praiseworthy generosity, but which was the first innocent step toward a gigantic scheme. ...

Now, it is about time to say plainly that such an organization as this is a menace to good government, and its aims should be vigorously fought by every friend of the merit system and every believer in democratic institutions. ...
