SUMMER RESORTS.
"To the mountains our people in increasing numbers yearly look for those days of relaxation and recreation necessary to maintain the human machine in full working condition. The languorous sloth of the seashore proves very seductive while it lasts, but many have decided that the annual outing should provide not only radical change of air and surroundings, but also such stimulation of flagging energies as will provide brown and vigor for the return to labor. For this they urge the mountain climb and ramble, the balsam of the mountain pines, and the clear, undisturbed mountain air."

"In this direction the Shasta Route now affords a wealth of attractions. The entire line of road from Ashland to Redding is studded with charming and accessible hotels and camps, where are cheer and comfort and healing change of air and surroundings, but also such stimulation of flagging energies as will provide brown and vigor for the return to labor. For this they urge the mountain climb and ramble, the balsam of the mountain pines, and the clear, undisturbed mountain air."

"Before visiting Europe, the people of the Northwest should see the glories of Yosemite Valley, and the wondrous groves of Mariposa and Calaveras; the Parisians are likely to make inquiries concerning these attractive resorts."

Send to Mr. C. H. Markham, General Passenger Agent, Portland, for new booklets on Castie Crags, Shasta Springs, McCloud River, Yosemite, and excursion rates thereto.

"Aye, that's the fellow!" called a hundred voices. As a matter of fact the man, numbering among his 50,000 men, was in a position to do this, and in the desperate fight it was making it could afford to bring every possible cent from its members rather than give way to the influx of new hands. Once the miners opened up their chances of bringing the owners to terms would be gone forever. Besides, there was no telling what events might occur if once public sympathy was large enough to enlist other workmen with them.

The appeals now made to the men in the coaches were frantic. Miners climbed up on the platforms and squeezed inside the cars to argue with the men. It was a scene of peculiar interest, one great swarm of hard-fisted and hard-faced men begging another crowd of the same kind to keep from exercising the natural desire to work for home and children. Surely what was first pronounced as a curse on our first parents has now become a double curse when work is the object of such a strange contest.

It would perhaps be difficult to tell how far the strangers were influenced by their sympathy for the miners or whether the sight of 1,000 men carrying walking sticks the size of a man's arm had its weight in bringing them to a decision. There were about 500 men in all. At last about 400 of them said they would go back on the condition that the union do as it agreed.

They came out of the coaches and were received with a tremendous burst of cheers and shouts. The remaining men, who for one reason and another refused to go back, were saluted with hisses, jeers, threats and abuse, but no violence was offered. The miners felt jubilant over the result of their appeal and were disposed to ridicule the handful of men now left.

"Let 'em go on, boys! What can the miners do with such a handful of greens?"
"Aye, let 'em go! They don't know enough to get out of the way of a blast now!"
"Let the men at De Mot's treat 'em. They're two to one down there!"

Meanwhile at the other end of the train matters were in the hands of Stuart and the local police of Champion. It is not too much to say that Stuart within the last 24 hours had grown immensely popular with the miners. The conference at the Iron Cliffs office that morning and Stuart's speech had leaked out somehow, and that accounted in part for his influence at this particularly critical time. At any rate he successfully appealed to the men to stand by the officers of the law when they came up and arrested the man who had thrown the ore and wounded the officer. The arrest was made without any resistance on the part of the miners who were at the end of the train. While that was going on Stuart prevailed on the men to bring back the engine and couple it on to the train again.

The wounded officer had been taken to the hotel, and Dr. Saxon had been summoned. Stuart addressed the officer in command that he would be personally responsible for his well being.

The miners, with their 400 new recruits, began to march into the square with the strangers massed in the middle. The agent of the mine owners, who had been in mortal terror during all the excitement and was actually hiding behind one of the seats in the coach that brought the troops, now came out on the platform, cursing the entire situation. The officer in command grudgingly wanted to know what he was going to do about it.

In reality there was nothing to be done but to go on with the handful of men left. The idea of trying to get the men back now that they were practically surrounded by the mob was not a pleasant idea to entertain. The agent satisfied himself of that fact very speedily. The officers and troops climbed into the coaches again, and the train started off down the range. A mighty cheer from the miners went up as the train disappeared. The whole event had taken less than 20 minutes. To Stuart it seemed like an hour. He was growing old very fast since his father died and left him in possession of his millions.

But he thought to himself that he was at the very beginning of his problem, and every event complicated the entire situation. He could not see the outcome. The only thing his heart rested back upon was his newly found life, which even in this excitement proved to be the most triumphant part of his consciousness. In thinking it over afterward he recalled, with particular pleasure, the fact that at the very moment of his leaping in between the miners and the leveled guns he said to himself: "I am a disciple of Christ. If I die, I shall be with him in paradise."

He made his way toward the different groups of miners now crowding in to the square and went on into the hotel. He wanted to inquire about the officer. Andrew had already gone on before.

REMINISCENCES—WISE AND OTHERWISE.

No. 46.

"When is No. 4 due here?" asked a gentlemanly appearing young man at an out-of-the-way country junction of a smart sleeky sort of a plug operator who had a short time before been given his first office on the C. & P. in Eastern Central Ill. The young man looked up at his questioner who was an agent and operator t the town of B. on the G. & C. about one hundred miles southwest of Chicago on a branch of the C. & P. R., and granted out some unconvincing and almost inaudible reply. The inquirer Mr. C. turned away and Mr. P. (Plug) the smart alec returned to his novel. In a few minutes the smart alec had a call over the line and he turned to the key and wired "all ready." Mr. C. was standing near by while P. took the telegram from the courier. Being a plug he became rattled and broke in asking the sender to "repeat" a word or phrase. Mr. C. quietly supplied the missing link and P. finished the message and then jumping up went toward Mr. C. and said: "Why did you not tell me that you are an operator? Come right in and sit down and rest yourself until No. 4 arrives which will be in about twenty minutes." "No, thank you," said C. "I do not care to go into your office as I am quite comfortable where I am, but young man, let me give you a little reasonable advice. Your company put you here to serve its patrons and let me tell you right now that it will pay you to give polite, satisfactory answers to those who apply to you for information rather than a gruff and meaningless ones. I am a railroad man and know whereof I speak." P. thanked Mr. C. and they soon parted.

A short time after 1 left B. Mr. C. was sent to Chicago to a much more lucrative position as I was sure he would be promoted by reason of his uniform courtesy and attention to business. I am not able to say what became of P., however, as I did not have occasion to visit that region again. It is to be hoped that C's advice fell on good soil and brought forth seed abundantly.

It railway employees and other public servants would consult but their own interest they would return kind answers to civil queries. I have approached all grades nearly of railway, steamship and steamboat men and have never received a curt nor unsatisfactory reply from a general officer or one well up in the service but I cannot say so much for those of inferior grades.

Query: H's politeness anything to do with getting these general officers their places?

LOOKING BACKWARD.
Four years ago, after a hard contest, seemingly, the country adopted a new policy and seated a new man in the presidential chair. For twelve or sixteen years, the people excited by democratic agitators and puffed up by democratic rainbow promises had been growing more and more dissatisfied at republican policy. In 1884 they had shown symptoms of revolt and by accident a democratic candidate, Grover the Good, had been elected. Four years of his policy which was radical did not do a great deal of harm but he was defeated in bringing a period of the greatest prosperity in the history of the country up to that time.

The people had not been seriously damaged by a democratic policy from 1884 to 1888 and they again elected Cleveland with no mistakes as to their intentions. The result to the country were as pronounced as the verdict of the people and "four years more of Grover" was amply sufficient. There is no need for us to harrow our souls with a retrospect of those nightmare years when the smoke of manufacture was a rarity to the eye as was the smell of food to the working man.

In 1896 the republican party was restored to power and McKinley inducted into the presidential chair in a manner to severely rebuke the democratic party and humiliate their dignity candidate. Four years restored lost prestige to agriculture, commerce and manufacture and brought four of such wealth and prosperity as has never visited a nation in all history.

Now President McKinley has been inducted into the presidential chair, not as before to humiliate and rebuke an opposing party but to express confidence in him and reward the party he represents applauding them as good and faithful servants. There seems no doubt as to the future, yet should the succeeding four years not prove as bountiful of blessings, yet the memory of the past four years would serve to smooth over a misfortune and condone many a fault.—Eugene Register.

The two-million dollar legislature is the subject of considerable comment just now, but before another session is convened the people will be asking appropriations for even a larger sum. The state university will need a new wing, a gravel walk or a woodshed, and to make this easier some out-of-the-way mineral spring will have to be improved for the benefit of a few individuals. Seeing the advantage that some certain locality is enjoying from the appropriations of state funds, an isolated community, in the name of "justice," will be given an appropriation for a high school or normal school, and the bounty graft will be extended from coyotes and sea lions to gophers and chicken hawks, at the request of some other corner. Verily, the legislatures are pretty much what the people make them, and as long as sectional jealousies are allowed a hearing, just so long will republicans, democrats and populists ask for a share of the spoils for their own constituents.—McMinnville Reporter.

Among the manufacturers who besought Sec. Gage relative to the threatened Russian tariff war was a manufacturer of farm machinery. He stated that the increased duties imposed by the Russians would amount to $8000 for the invoices already afloat from his factory and that the new regulation would prohibit trade with that country, for American farming machinery. Sec. Gage called attention to the fact that the administration did not impose the sugar duties to which the new Russian ukase is retaliatory and further that he as a part of the administration could not abrogate such sugar duties. The secretary further called attention to the fact that the new Russian rules do not effect farm machinery. The manufacturer then realized that he had yelped before he was hit. The incident is another graphic illustration of what republicans claimed when the Dingley bill was in issue. Consumers do not pay the tariff, but the importers.

An Oregonian reporter, after a presumably "careful research," published a story to the effect that one third of the sheep in the Willamette valley had died from eating leech. Later he admitted that it was only on the low, swampy lands that the loss of sheep had been great. Finally the story lost interest, and the loss of sheep is based upon a few in number, and the actual facts in relation to this few would indicate that their chief ailment was old age.—Reporter.

Remarkable Cures of Rheumatism.
From the Vindicator, Rutherfordton, N. C.
The editor of the Vindicator has had occasion to test the efficacy of Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice with the most remarkable results in each case. First, with rheumatism in the shoulder from which he suffered excruciating pain for ten days, which was relieved with two applications of Pain Balm, rubbing the parts afflicted and realizing instant benefit and entire relief in a very short time. Second, in rheumatism in thigh joint almost prostrating him with severe pain, which was relieved by two applications, rubbing with the liniment on retiring at night, and getting up free from pain. For sale by Delta Drug Store.

Headache often results from a disordered condition of the stomach and constipation of the bowels. A dose or two of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets will correct these disorders and cure the headache. Sold by Delta Drug Store.

Mrs. C. E. VanDusen, of Klumbour, Wis., was afflicted with stomach trouble and constipation for a long time. She says, "I have tried many preparations but none have done me the good that Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets have." These Tablets are for sale at Delta Drug Store. Price 25 cents. Satisfactory.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

Negotiations are pending for a skimming plant at Athena.

A. C. Fordyce who owned a fruit farm just south of Medford, Jackson county has sold it for $10,000.

A corner lot in Medford was sold last week for $5000. It is not stated what buildings, if any, were included.

A carload of hardwood lumber was shipped to Portland on Thursday's West Side freight by the Corvallis sawmills.

The price of lumber has been advanced $1.00 per thousand feet at the centers of production. A trust has been formed.

About 10,000 acres of land about Medford, Jackson county has been bonded to a company that will prospect the tract for oil.

Geo. Handaker shipped 50 sacks of flour from Junction to Cottage Grove, Wednesday, and 5000 pounds of feed to Eugene.

George Cavanaugh, of Huntington was arrested at Walla Walla last week for alleged horse-stealing and taken to Union for trial.

Two carloads of machinery passed from Philomath on Thursday's train for the new sawmill in course of erection on the John Hyde place.

T. F. Dufley a drunken engineer of the Marshfield, Coos county Match Factory confessed to setting fire to the factory which burned Feb. 27 last.

It is reported that certain parties are ready to start a cheese factory in the vicinity of Jewell, in the Nehalem valley, provided the milk from 150 cows can be secured.

A company is surveying for a trolley car system in Marion county. The plans of the company have not yet been published, but the surveyors were unable to conceal the fact that they are at work.

The abolition of the canteen at Ft. Stevens is having a good effect on the liquor business at Hammond. The three saloons there are doing a prosperous business, and a fourth was to have been opened April 1.

The petition for a special school meeting at Eagle Point to vote on the proposition to bond the district for $500 has been filed with the clerk, but no action will be taken on it, as the law provides that but one tax may be levied each year, and the board has already levied a 7-mill tax.

Petitions are being circulated at Eagle Point protesting against the Fish Lake Ditch Company taking water out of Butte Creek. Farmers along the creek have to depend on the waters of that stream to irrigate their gardens and alfalfa. An injunction will be filed and the matter will be tested in the courts.

Jesse Orme, while prospecting on the south bank of Rogue river, about a mile west of Savage Rapids, found a good pay dirt. He dug a little ditch, built a reservoir and ground-saucer for 12 days, and the cleanum amounted to about $60. He found two or three nuggets of $6 each and several more worth $4 each.

The Department of Indian Affairs recently asked each of the Indian schools of the country to manufacture a settle to be placed on exhibition at the Pan-American Exposition. Chemawa, Oregon was the only school that would undertake the task. Peter Williams, an Indian student, has just completed the piece of furniture. The settle is of Oregon cedar, is about seven feet long and stands nearly six feet high. The back and ends are pleasingly ornamented with scroll work and the whole is given a polish that is the admiration of cabinet-makers. The seat and back are upholstered with leather, very neatly put on.

The skeleton of a man that has lain in the water for many months was last week found in the lower Umpqua River. It is believed to be that of Senator Al Reed, who was drowned two years ago, full 30 miles above. Only a shred of the under shirt and a part of the pantaloons waist band remained of the clothing. It is possible that the bones may be the remains of Fred Bulling who mysteriously disappeared some months ago, though the measurements more nearly correspond with what the coroner thinks would be those of Senator Reed. However the verdict of the jury is that the skeleton is that of a person unknown.
