THE TWO IDEAS.

The difference between the American and English systems of raising revenue is seen when we compare the Dingley Tariff Act with the English budget published last week by the cabinet minister correspondi g with our secretary of the treasury.

The English system is on the lines of free trade and is imposed solely for revenue purposes. A tariff is levied in England on those articles of imports that are consumed by the common people and hence will be revenue producers. The late tariff act, called then the budget lays an additional tax on sugar. The people have to buy sugar whatever its price, hence it is a good revenue producer. But the tax on alcoholic liquors is not increased because it al ready is as high as it can be for producing income. If more was laid the price would be prohibitory to many persons, hence less would be sold and a decrease of revenue would follow.

But the most unpopular tax levied by the Hicks Beach act is the export duty on coal. An export duty is unknown in the United States. The effect on English trade will hardly be disasterous, though for igneers who are in the coal trade view the matter with great satisfaction. The United States, a great competitor, will not fail to profit by the burden which England voluntarily puts on one of her own industries.

The Am rican system sometimes has had revenue with incidental protection in view and sometimes protection first and revenue second. The Dingly act is for protection first, yet the revenue idea is made prominent in that all luxuries consumed by the wealthy classes is taxed almost to the maximum revenue producing capacity. Manufactures are fostered by a tariff on foreign competing articles not by the English method of laying an export duty on raw material for the purpose of compelling its manufacture at home. The American system seems preferable. We on this side have free trade in exports and like the system.

NONE ITS EQUAL.

J. Pierpont Morgan and company are first bankers. Then they own coal lands, and railroads to carry the coal to furnaces and to ocean ports for shipment to foreign countries. They own iron mines and steel plants and now they have bought the greatest steamship line in the world, the Leyland Line, an English corporation. Now then. The Morgan railroads have employment in carrying coal to its own furnaces and its own exporting ships and carrying products of industry from territory where there is no competitor. Its mines have a market at its own furnaces and rolling mills. Its rolling mills have a market in supplying rails for its roads, iron for its locomotives, plates for its ships and by reason of its immense capacity plates for government warships. It has freights for ocean transportation. In other words the Morgan Company is an immense Department Industrial Organization. An example of what can be done is the success of the Carnegie Co. In the beginning Carnegie was a poor boy who found a place on a Pennsylvanis railroad. He worked hard, was affable, obliging and saved his money. He had genius for looking ahead. He bought iron mines when they were cheap. After a while he had a little rolling mill. His railroad friends, when they wanted rails did not go shopping, but went to Carnegie and took all he had and all he could make. He had a certain market from which he kept all competition by interesting his customers in his enterprises, and thus he grew. There are many other iron mines and mills in the country enjoying equal tariff protection, but they have no such prosperity as the Carnegie Company had. Now this protecting mantle is over the shoulders of Morgan & Company. What cares that firm for tariff protection. They really would prefer to be without it. The smaller competitors would be weakened and their monopoly would be only the greater. But suppose the tariff does benefit Morgan & Co. might not its repeal be as a knife drawn through our own hands? It is stated that the Carnegie Iron Company employed 30,000 operatives. This number is perhaps doubled in the Morgan Company. Take the tariff away and the company might find it profitable to move to another country. Who would employ the operatives here or wherewith could they feed themselves.

There must be caution used in adopting Mr. Babcock's theories. He may unwitingly serve the interests of the trusts. Free trade England has trusts. Our tariff system may prove to be the very policy that will enable new manufacturing industries to get strength necessary to compete with such mammouth combinations as the Morgan Company.

NEGRO SUFFRAGE BLUNDER.

"The undiscriminating act by which the negros had conferred on them the right to vote was one of those blunders that it is not easy to escape from after once it is committed, but which it would seem we ought to have had northern statesmanship sufficiently intelligent to prevent." Rev. Dr. Parkhurst in a sermon delivered in New York, Apr, 28th.

This is the condition found in the south today by theorists. It may be true but in 1866, when the XV amendment was under discussion Judge Geo. H. Williams author of that legislation and who is with us yet, stated on a trip from Grant's Pass to Kerbyville in Josephine county, this state, that there were two policies to persue, one, give the negro the ballot and he would protect himself. The other maintain a large standing army in the south to keep order. At no time must we forget what confronted our statesmen during the reconstruction period.

George W. Davis, clerk of the State Board for the management of the school funds before Gen. Odell is defaulter in the sum of 30,952.08. His official bond is in the sum of $5000. The net loss to the school fund is $26,952.08. This man's books and accounts were examined by a legislative committee in 1897 and again in 1899, but the investigations seems to have been a case of "Davis says his books are correct." Davis was a republican in politics, but that fact did not prevent him being a thief and the only consolation the republican party can have is that it was a republican committee appointed by a republican legislature that first discovered the defalcation and made the fact public. Davis has absconded and his present residence is unknown to the authorities.

Aguinaldo is astonished at the fair treatment received by the hands of the American. Well he might be too; he was just as well assured of the United States attitude before he began his unessfull career. His wonderful good; feeling was made possible by a genuine good thrashing.

If the Oregon legislature had done nothing except to pass that nickle-in-the slot bill it would have been worth all it cost, to the young and rising generation. No mode of gambling was ever devised and run openly that was as intising as these machines, and nothing ever taught boys to become spendthrifts as quickly as those machines. The state should vote Senator Proebstel a medal for framing the bill.—Transcript.
