The Delta Drug Store has installed gasoline gas lights using three lamps or burners two in the front store and one behind the prescription case. The lights are very bright and preferred to electric arc lights because the flame is steady though there is some noise as of steam blowing off. It is claimed that the gas lights are more economical than electricity.

On or about May 12, at Middleton, Braxton Brown complains that he was assaulted and battered by Mark Sandstone. Sandstone was arrested and taken before Justice Everitt in North Hillsboro precinct last Tuesday where he plead guilty and was fined $50 and costs, the extreme penalty fixed by the statute. The defendant paid his fine and was discharged. Clyde Tyson, Lester Ashpole, Frank Fisher and Earnest Baker were also arrested because it is asserted they had some hand in the row. Their examination is set for today, June 21.

It is proposed to fit up athletic grounds in Hillsboro where ball games and bicycle riding may be the events to attract attention and furnish entertainment to the lovers of outdoor sports. In cities having colleges, the care of the grounds are left to the schools but here there is no educational organization having students of an age to take the responsibility of management. Some other way must be devised. A corporation is suggested. A more simple scheme, though lacking in some things is a committee. Then there is the single owner. What is needed is a full block of ground, one of our blocks, that is four hundred feet square. Within this square a bicycle track, one third of a mile in length may be graded, leaving abundant room in the center of the block for a base ball ground. An amphitheatre capable of seating at least 1,000 people ought to be built. Since there is no public fund for maintaining such a circus it will have to be fenced with a tight board wall so that an entrance fee may be charged and collected. It is estimated that these improvements will cost three hundred dollars or more. Such a ground will be a valuable place this fall when the Native Sons hold their carnival which is now arranging.

Mr. John Beagle who is in the customs service at the southeastern port of entry in Alaska spent Sunday in Hillsboro. Some of his friends offered consolation because of the quiet and lonesome place where he is stationed. "Well now it is not so lonesome as you think, we have a mail almost every day, and always two steamers per day, one going north and another returning. That is the trouble with Oregonians. They do not realize what Alaska is or the opportunities that invite trade. There are 100,000 people in that territory, either on the American side or the Canadian, and every pound of food except fish, every garment worn every tool used, and every piece of machinery installed has to be shipped in there." At Skagway for five months in the year 1000 tons of merchandise is landed each day. Most of this goes to Dawson and is freighted over the mountains by rail 120 miles to White Horse rapids which is at the head of steam navigation on the Yukon. This short railroad is without doubt the best paying transportation property in America or any other country. For that 120 miles the freight rate is 5½ cents per pound, or $110 per ton. This however is better than the 35 cents per pound and more than was charged by the Indians who packed over the mountains. But all the freight for consumption and use in Alaska does not go by the Skagway route. The Yukon river from the sea is a high way during the summer months. And Nome has its landing beach. It must not be supposed that Portland merchants are not having a share in this great trade, since there are a few firms that have learned the way to Alaska, but they go by Seattle, their merchandise being sent to that port by rail.

At the late street fair Mr. Benjamin Schofield showed a specimen of brome grass the best of the new fodder grasses that has received notice in the west I stands drouth well and is well liked by cattle, but it comes in that list of new things that, as Mr. Schofield says, the Willamette Valley farmer should use caution in introducing. For wet places Tillamook muskeet will not bring great disappointment. Orchard grass is good for shade and produces some pasture but the safe meadow plants for this County are Vetches, the Clovers and Timothy. Nothing can take their places and it would seem that it is time and money wasted to seek better forage plants. For dry fodder timothy is ideal. Red clover put away in good condition makes the heifers grow, though the wet fortnight that is apt to occur just as clover is ready to cut is very wearying For ensilage, vetches and the clovers fill every requirement though there are those who say that green corn makes the best silo filler. There are advantages attaching to the silo, one of which is the possibility of cutting clover at a time when there is not good hay weather. The authority above quoted favors Vetches clovers and timothy above all others.

Schulmerich Bros. are to be commended for being so thoughtful as to give opportunity for their customers to exercise taste and judgment in selecting ladies' winter jackets and wraps. The traveling salesman of Mills & Gibbs a large New York house was here on Monday. Messrs Schulmerich Bros. invited their lady customers to visit the sample room and select a wrap to be delivered at the beginning of winter. Instead of having a stock of ten or fifteen garments to select from they had 600. It was like going into the great New York house itself only the prices here are more reasonable than in the Gotham retail department. A number of ladies took advantage of the opportunity and ordered for future delivery.

A farmer who is joined by others asks the town people who are in business, merchants, blacksmiths and implement men to open their respective places of business as early as six o'clock in the morning and keep them open until after 10 o'clock at night during the harvest months. At first glance this would seem unreasonable but is not an hour in the morning worth the horse shoe nail of Benj. Franklin. It is understood that the farm implement houses in Portland are never closed during the summer months, day nor night.

The soliciting committee appointed recently by Griffin Cabin, Native Sons have taken pledges for money amounting to $585, to be used for promoting the Carnival this fall, The canvas has not yet been completed. Eyman the wheel suddenly flew in pieces, one of which caught him on the nose, severing the septum and tearing open the wing of the nasal bone an inch in length. One large piece of the stone was found imbedded in the ceiling immediately above where he was standing at the time of the explosion.

IN FIRST OREGON.

Dr. Wm. Geiger, who came to Oregon in 1839, died June 16, at his home in Forest Grove, aged nearly 85 yrs. Some years ago when his mind was yet strong his son-in law, Hon. S. B. Huston, had several conversations with his father, asking questions of his early experiences in the West. The answers were reduced to writing at the time. These answers have been extended into a connected story and that part which covers the time from early youth up to the time when he fixed his permanent home on the Geiger D. L. C. is here given:

"I was born at Augusta, Alleghany county, New York, on September 15, 1816. I grew up there and attended a private academy in my native town. We moved to Oakville, Monroe county, Michigan, about 40 miles west of Detroit in 1833. I remained there until 1837 when I went to Quincy, Illinois. I went by steamer to Cleveland, Ohio, by canal boat from there to Portsmouth on the Ohio river, thence by steamboat to St. Louis, thence in a small boat to Quincy. I was compelled to stop over at Maysville, Ky., on account of the overloaded condition of the steamer. While there I met Jerone Clement, an old playmate from New York. The journey from Michigan to Quincy, Illinois, took about four weeks. I went to school at the Mission Institute situated about five miles from Quincy. The president proprietor of the school was Dr. Nelson, author of Nelson on Infidelity. I left Quincy in April, 1838, in company with a schoolmate by the name of Benson intending to cross the plains that year. We were accompanied to St. Louis by Judge Snow of Quincy, a capitalist of that place. We remained at St. Louis two weeks and went from there by steamboat to Westport Missouri. While at St. Louis, Elkanah Walker and wife, Cushing Eels and wife, Wm. H. Gray and Cornelius Rogers passed through on their way to Oregon and I became acquainted with them at that time. They were coming with the outfit of the American Fir Company which had sent a pirogue loaded with provisions to meet them at the mission on the Kaw river about 120 miles west of Westport. My friend Benson came with me to Westport also the Rev. Renshaw. We bought our outfits at Westport and started to the mission on the Kaw hoping to catch the American Fur Company's outfit before it left there. The pirogue, however, had arrived at the mission earlier than it was expected, and Mr. Walker, Eels and company came through with the agents of the American Fur Campany. Before leaving Westport, I had met the Rev. Harvey Clark and the Rev. Allen, a graduate of Oberlin as was Renshaw. They were poth independent missionaries and Congregationalists. Clark and Renshaw went to the mission with us expecting to go through that year. Our gide was John Gray, a quarter Iroquois Indian. He insisted that it was too dangerous to attempt the journey that year with so small a party on account of the Sioux and Pawnee Indians. We therefore returned to Westport. Mr. Clark and his wife taught a private school at Independence, Missouri, until the next spring. Renshaw, Allen and Benson returned to Quincy. I taught school in what was known as the Higgins and Gregg neighorhood about 15 miles up the river and ten miles from the river. Mrs. Melinda Hoover (the mother of Mrs. Benton Killin) and her brothers and sisters went to school to me there. Her name was then Melinda Cave. Her father was a minister but had never enjoyed the advantages of an education. He took lessons in grammer from me and learned very rapidly. I received three dollars per scholar quarterly for teaching school, and I had from 25 to 50 pupils. The settlers built the school house after I was employed. It was a log house with one log left out for a window. It was heated by a fireplace which was so large as to occupy almost one entire end of the building. While teaching there I shot many wild turkeys. They were often so fat that their breasts would split open when they fell out of the tree.

Walker and Eels afterward became well known and were prominently indentified with the early settlement of Oregon. Wm. H. Gray afterward wrote a history of Oregon, He had been out here before with Whitman and Parker. He went back for a wife and more missionaries. He settled with Spaulding in Idaho. In religious matters he was a Presbyterian. The Rev. Smith I have mentioned settled at Spauldings and Whitmans, He learned the Indian languages more rapidly than any one of the pioneers although I acquired the Nez Perces language without much trouble. He came to the Willamette Valley about 1840 and married Satira Leslie, a daughter of the Rev. David Leslie, one of the Methodist missionaries who lived at the mission, opposite what is now known as Wheatland. Mr. Rogers acted as interpreter to Dr. White, the Indian sub-agent, and was drowned at Oregon City with his wife and small sister. They went over the falls. Dr. White jumped ashore first and by so doing pushed the boat into the stream. There was an Indian in the boat who jumped and went ashore undyr the water. The affair was witnessed by Mrs. Abernethy. This was in 1843.

Last Friday night say about 9 o'clock 75 boys and men, as testimony establishes, gathered at the residence of Mr. Ralph Wann, recently wedded, on First street south of Baseline and proceeded to charivari him. Tin pans were beaten, bomb fire crackers were exploded and screeches and yells were indulged. At least four boys climbed to the roof, his dwelling is a one story structure, and began stamping on the shingles and calling for a sack to stop the chimney flue. About that time the Hillsboro Cornet band reached the premises to serenade Mr. Wann and his bride. The musicians began setting up music stands and distributing music but the discordant noise was so great that the band leader, who is also deputy sheriff remarked that "this has gone far enough." He went to the rear of the building and ordered the boys off the roof. Some came down immediately, but one or two said they didn't have to, that they could not be arrested without a warrant. The deputy sheriff started up to bring the boys but they did not wait for him but came down. All then went into the front yard, the officer ordering them out of the yard and putting his hand on the shoulder of one boy and pushing him and two or three in front out of the gate. The boys protested loudly that he had no right to order them without a warrant. The band then set up music stands and got ready to play, but before they began playing the boys in the street threw clods at the players. Some were hit. One piece of music was played outside, the boys beating an accompaniment on tinpans, bells and fire crackers. The band was invited in the house when three or four pieces of music were executed. When the musicians came out the charivari crowd had dispersed, and order was established. That was all till Monday when 9 recognized youngsters were arrested charged with being in a disorderly assembly. Seven plead guilty and were fined five dollars each. Four paid the five, three went to jail, and two plead not guilty and one stood trial. He was acquitted. In the remaining case the same evidence would have been introduced and would have resulted the same wherefore it was dismissed on motion of the city attorney. In this affair mistakes have been made. First the boys ought to have remembered that it is always their duty to act as dignified gentlemen, and on no account to allow curiosity to draw them into questionable places. Again officers have a right to preserve order warrant or no warrant first by commanding peace, but if that does not reduce the disturbance then they must arrest and take before a magistrate. But the punishment that the boys of Friday night's escapade deserved was parental chastisement which some of them got. The boys who laid in the lock up must not pose as martyrs and organize another charivari party when the next young man weds for he has the right to administer force sufficient to stop the disorderly proceedings on his premises. The law books contain histories where man slaughter has happened and an acquittal has followed.
