Gov. Nash has been re-nominated for governor of Ohio by the republicans.

It may be safely said that the constitution follows the flag, the McKinley administration follows the constitution, and the people follow the McKinly administration.—Eugene Register.

The Argus has adopted a better device than common to bolster its attack on the Supreme Court. Judge Harlan is an able man but the INDEPENDENT thinks he could be answered by quoting the opinion of Judge White who was a democrat when in politics. He is probably as much of a democrat now as Judge Harlan is a republican. In truth neither man allows political bias to tint his decision. And because the judgment of the court is made up of the opinions of men who are generally recognized as being disinterested in everything except the welfare, material prosperity, honor and glory of their country. The INDEPENDENT respects such dicisions of the court and accepts them as final.

Commerce will follow the line of least resistance. A line of transportation may be never so strongly entrenched but that it can be defeated when a new line is established having less grades and shorter mileage. All that is necessary is to show shippers the short way. But agreed common rates must be abolished. For instance from Wallula to Portland the distance is 214 miles down grade all the way and a locomotive can pull all the cars that can be hitched on. From Pasco, a near station on the N. P. the Walla Walla country is tapped and the distance to Tacoma is 255 miles with a range of mountains 2847 feet high to cross. It takes a good engine to pull 15 cars over. The tariff is what will be a profit to the N. P. The O. R. & N. agrees to maintain the same rate. Hence the shipper has no choice of routes, but let the O. R. & N. make a rate independent of the N. P., one that will be a fair profit for the work done then see how many car loads of wheat would be lifted 2800 feet to get to the top of the Cascades. The Oregonian did a good turn for Portland last Monday when it published the grade diagrams of the two routes from Lewiston. The O. R. & N. ought not to let the N. P. bluff. Further, The Oregon Short Line ought to build down Snake river and meet the O. R. & N. at Lewiston. By such route the Powder river hills and Blue mountains would be missed. That is the line of least resistance, and should be adopted for continental traffic. It is almost if not quite as good as the Nicaragua canal.

European politicans are finding fault with American locomotives and assert that it costs 20 to 25 per cent. more for coal, 50 per cent. more for oil and 60 per cent. more for repairs than English build locomotives. However, the American machine costs $2000 less than the English. The American machines were bought at a time when English machinists were cut on a strike and the shops could not furnish locomotives for the roads. The Amarican builders reply that there may be some loss of heat for the reason that the cylinders of the American locomotives are exposed while the others are covered. On the other hand the Yankee machine is easier to get to, which is some compensation. It is further ieplied that the Americans are built to run at 180 pounds pressure while the others run at 160. And if the Americans on English roads are worked at 180 they will be more economical than the English machines. That is the work done by Americans at 180 will be cheaper than the same work of the English at 160. The American builders further reply that the engine drivers and firemen have much to do with the consumption of coal. This is a fact that our own firemen and engineers are well acquainted. An engineer may so use his steam that his fireman will have easy work or he may have hard work. All of which necessitates the exporting of firemen and engineers to run and care for our exported locomotives. This fierce criticism will be for our good. If it is found to be merited then our machanics will change the models so that there will be no fault. It has never been charged to us new world people that we so are wedded to old things that we could not be brought to adopt the new. There are very few boys in America going to mill with corn in one end of the bag and a stone in the other.

THE TARIFF AGAIN.

Six years ago when the debate on tariff legislation raged fiercely it was thought all phazes of the question were studied and a year later when the Dingley bill was passed no one, at least in the protection ranks, could see how the issue could again come up, but it begins to appear that the old questions, in part, are to be before the people. The free traders charge that the tariff fosters trusts, and point to the steel combine as an instance. Say they "if the tariff was removed from iron and steel we could import from abroad and force the American combine to terms." Before we try the experiment it might be well to study conditions. The steel combine acknowleged to be a very powerful corporation, does not control all the furnaces in the country. There are many and widely scattered iron and steel establishments in the United States that are allowed to exist by reason of protection given by the tariff It is profitable to enquire whether these "little plants" do not more perfectly regulate the Mammouth Steel Company than would be possible for the foreign concern. Indeed a few things have been said which lead to the belief that the big combine would like to have its little neighbors out of the way. The very organization of the trust emphasizes that, for why else did the promoters seek to organize the little plants into our concern.

For guidance in tariff legislation along the new lines we have the experience of a neighbor, Canada. That great English colony has a tariff as high or higher than ours and some years ago agitated the question as we today begin to talk. The government asked for the privilege of lowering or removing the tariff from trust manufactured articles and got it. The history of the result is given by the Toronto, Canada, News which says:

"What reductions have been made have not proven to be advantageous to the country. The duty on coal oil was reduced and the price of the article has gone up. The duty on binder twine was cut in two and the price increased one-half. It was then put on the free list and up it went again. The duty on fence wire was reduced and the farmers have ever since then been complaining of increased prices. Nearly every reduction in Tariff has been followed by increase in prices.

"It will be argued, of course, that the increased prices are due to combinations and not to reductions in duty. Perhaps so. But when the Laurier Government assumed power they asked for privilege to place on the free list any article the price of which had been enhanced unduly by a monopoly. In these cases they are at a loss. Their remedy has been applied before the disease broke out. Some people go so far as to blame the remedy for starting disease. At any rate, the situation is confusing and we can hardly blame the Government for refusing to make further reductions in the Tariff, their experiments having proven so very unsatisfactory to themselves and costly to the farmers."

The Insurance Press for June reports that the total sum paid for death losses in the United States for 1900 was $184,431,946. This does not include the death losses paid by fraternal insurance societies.

An orator before the graduating class of the University of Oregon stated that the professions, law, medicine, theology and pedagogics, are not overcrowded, that in the front ranks there is an abundance of room Perhaps that is true and the reason for it is that the industries, steelmaking, banking, railroad, and farming, are absorbing all the men of brightest minds and greatest capacities and paying them better than the professions can possibly afford.
