SPECIAL SESSION.

The Salem Journal, Col. Hofer editor, is asking for a special session of the legislature for the purpose of enacting a state official salary law and an act making effective the initiative and referendum amendment to the constitution. The demand for this legislation is the claim that if enacted before the officers elect are sworn in, there will be a saving of $200,000 less the cost of the special session, which is put at $1000 per day. The session would last from ten to fifteen days wherefore such special session would cost about $15,000. The Journal does not point out the items that would go to make up the $200,000. And the Independent does not believe any such saving can be made. The propostition to put the officials on a flat salary is a good one and should be adopted, but it does not mean that the governor will get less money than now paid. No one supposes that it would be just to pay the governor no more than $1500. That sum may have been sufficient 44 years ago when we were few in number and the business of the office trivial in amount. Even the secretary of state would get more from the state treasury under a flat salary than is now paid to him. What that officer gets more than the $1500 comes from fees paid by wealthy corporations who are best able to contribute. No doubt there is a little leekage here since the state pays the clerk hire that performs the work for these outside parties. If that outside work were not done fewer clerks would be needed, and if done the emoluments should pay clerk hire and not the state. How much these fees amount to cannot be known but it is not believed that the sum even aproximates to $200,000. In the state printer's office, where it is claimed that a great saving is possible, the annual estimate for the past two years was $35,000. If all of this were saved it would not amount to a fourth of $200,000. In truth the state printer does not get a very great salary since he pays for his labor at the highest wages demanded by the printer's union. The office is a union office. A saving can be made in the printing office and the way to do it is for the legislature to order less work done. The printer is on the fee system and gets paid for what he does.

The laws paying the officers more than the constitutional allowance are acts passed by the legislature and can be repealed at any time. The regular session can do that as well as a special session. The constitutional objection to the repeal of such or the enactment of any law is removed by the initiative and referendum amendment. The necessity for an extra session does not exist.

STATE PRESS.

Col. E. Hofer and Governor Geer threaten to call an extra session of the Oregon legislature.—Albany Herald.

Gov. Geer has started a movement for an extra session of the legislature to secure an immediate reduction of salaries of state officials. He believes now in carrying out platform promises. He does not wish Chamberlain to get that $6000 salary against which he declaimed so much during the campaign. He fears the reductuon in salaries, made during the terms of the newly elected officials, cannot be changed after they shall be sworn into office. Geer is a fine man—a regular Artemus Ward, who thinks the best place for a boil is—on the other fellow's leg!—Astoria News.

Going on the supposition that Geo. E. Chamberlain is our next governor, we expect to see the governor's salary confined to $1500 a year. But will he stand for that? It is highly probable that Chamberlain contemplates drawing the customary $1250.—Eugene Register.

The official count for governor has not yet been completed, the delay being in Multnomah county where the tally sheets for three precincts were sealed in the ballot boxes. The clerk refuses to open these as was done by the clerk in this county, but will wait for an order of the Circuit Court. Chamberlain is, without much doubt, elected by a lead of 250 to 300 votes. All the other republican state candidates are elected by the usual majorities. Mr. Tongue's plurality in this district is over 7000, a gain of 4000 over the 1900 election.

DESERET ANNIVERSARY.

Salt Lake City, Utah, June 2.
Editor Independent:—

Yesterday wast the 101st anniversary of the birth of Brigham Young, but as the 1st of June came on Sunday, and the "Mutual Improvement" conference being in session, the celebration was not held until today.

His family, decendants and friends honored his memory by having a reunion at Saltair. The statute of President Young at the head of Main street, was beautifully decorated with evergreens, flowers, colored lights and flags. Held's band assembled around it in the morning and played favorite airs of the leader of the Mormon people. While this was going on the veteran artillerymen of Nauvoo Legion took two guns to Capitol Hill north of the city, and fired a salute of forty-seven guns.

The special feature of the day was the reunion at Saltair. Saltair pavillion is a pleasure resort about eighteen miles west of the city on Great Salt Lake. Trains went out about six times during the day.

The country thro which one passes to reach Saltair is dry and barren, the principal product being sage brush. Very little of it is under cultivation.

The Jordan River, which is filled with quicksand and whirlpools in places, is a narrow, dirty looking little stream, hardly worthy of the name river, and was crossed before one had time to more than take one hasty look.

The pavillion, which was built, or rather finished, June 1, 1893, is of Moorish architecture and was built at a cost of $360,000. It rests securely on 2,500 piles, and when first erected was 4000 feet from shore, but the waters of the lake have been receding so rapidly of late years that sand bars can be seen more than a hundred feet west of the pavillion and the bather must wade out for many rods before the water reaches even to the waist. Soon the resort will be on dry land. Old timers here say that there have been times when one could walk over to Antelope Island dry shod, but now he would have to use a boat. So the water may return at some future day.

There are 620 bath houses completely equipped and the floor for dancing measures 250 by 140 ft. Many thousands can be accomodated on the pavillion at one time. There are many attractions—a shooting gallery, a steam swing, beside other swings, placed on the first floor where hundreds can eat lunch at one time, and many other minor attractions. Those who are so inclined can climb to the top of the pavillion and there obtain a fine view of Great Salt Lake, the islands and the Oquirrh mountains. Or if they are tired constitutionally, they may wander out on the wings and gaze down into the lake or watch the seagulls which circle about the pavillion.

Today a special program was rendered. Three of Brigham Young's wives were present besides 350 or more of his decendants. When first going on the second floor all grabbed a chair and pushed it along on the waxed floor until they reached the authorities of the church, when they stopped. Everyone was comfortable when it was announced that all were to gather 'round the orchestra stand, which was at the south end. Joseph F. Smith, the present head of the church, was the first speaker. He paid many glowing tributes to the departed president. B. H. Roberts delivered an oration. He was a little handicapped by his introduction. B. Young, son of Brigham Young, Sr., introduced him. After describing the many ways in which he resembled Brigham Young, Sr., he closed by saying that there was still another way, as B. H. Roberts, as well as Brigham Young, was the father of twins. Roberts was perfectly astounded, and so embarrassed that he hardly knew how to begin. He said that he had meant to be serious and that it was a little unkind of his friend to switch him off in such a manner. He said that he had never dreamed of resembling Brigham Young, and that all knew about the twins. The speech was fine as Robert's always are. He spoke particularly of the preparation that Brigham Young had to fit him for the great work which God had for him to do. He was prepared by the lessons he learned in early life thro coming in contact with the common people etc. During the course of his remarks he made one assertion that would be a good subject for debate.

Mormon's believe, and they are quite right in their belief according to the Bible, in preexistence of spirits. While speaking on this subject Roberts advanced the theory, if one can call it such, that environment and parentage have very little to do with the building of character; that our character was already formed in the world of spirits, or something to that effect. The last speaker was Dr. Tanner who of course spoke as the rest had done, about the man they were endeavoring to honor. I had the pleasure of meeting the President of the church, Joseph F. Smith, who is a kindly, dark-eyed elderly man, Brigham Young, Jr., and a son of Parley P. Pratt. We saw, before returning home, a glorious sunset on the lake. It went down quickly but left the west all ablaze with red and gold, the islands in the lake were misty and blue, and long shadows rested on the still waters of the lake.

Thus ended the 101st anniversary of Brigham Young's birth.
