FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 21 1902.

Gen. Odell of Salem has lost on his little lie land scheme by which he sought to have 100,000 acres of land in Eastern Oregon designated as mineral, as the news reports of yesterday. Sec. Hitchcock decides that the local land offices must first pass on the question.

It is announced that Southern republicans will support Senator Hannah for the presidency in 1904 instead of Roosevelt. Now while the senator would make an admirable business executive, the shadow of the fine Italian hand of J. P. Morgan with his trust association is suspicious. The materialism of that interest may not be any more real than the democratic victory in New York.

The coal operators have been coarse in their opposition to the miners, perhaps not to the extent of using dynamite did the miners, but a brutality was displayed that was unequalled for; and now their attorney continues the same unbecoming roughness when examining witnesses before the Arbitration Committee. There is enough that may be urged against organized labor without resorting to billingsgate. A dignified opposition to a cause is more effective than brow beating.

Who has tried persistently for weeks to settle the great coal strike? President Roosevelt, a republican, Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, a republican, Senators Quay, Penrose and Platt, republicans. Who has stood persistently in the way of a settlement? President Baer of the Reading Railway, a democrat. There is not and ought not to be any politics in this strike, but when democrats talk strike politics, just remind them of these facts.—Crescent City News

The river of Crook County is the upper course of the Deschutes, and as it for the most part flows in a fissure made probably by eruption the plains on either side of the stream are arid. Now, seeing there is a disagreement between National Irrigationists and private corporations that propose to water the land under the Cary Act, would it not be unfortunate for the National Irrigationists to succeed in having the selections under the Cary Act rejected for the reason they are not arid? Then when they seek to have an irrigation system promoted to be met with their own testimony that the land is not arid. The two interests ought to compromise their differences.

An election midway in an administration is a point of danger. The two Administrations of McKinley and Roosevelt have reversed the record. Even Grant lost the second Congress of his second term with a crushing adverse majority. The Congress chosen midway in Hayes' term was against him overwhelmingly. So with Arthur and Harrison. An adverse Congress in the last half is the rule. McKinley's great administration, with its splendid prosperity and its triumphant advance in the world influence, broke the precedents and brilliantly carried its second congress. And now President Roosevelt, with his faithful maintenance of the same policies and his vigorous and courageous leadership on new questions, wins the people and sweeps the country with the same irresistible force. The broad, overshadowing fact of the election is an assured republican congress.—Philadelphia Press.

Gen. W. H. Odell, ex-Clerk of the State School Land Board, an ex-Surveyor General, is working to have 100,000 acres of land in Baker, Malheur and Grant Counties declared mineral. Since the 16th and 36th sections in each township are set apart by the general government for school land to be sold and the proceeds deposited in the common school fund, the mineralizing of that acreage would blot out the state's title to about 315 sections of school land. But the government has been allowing lie lands in such cases hence school land script would be issued for that amount of land, and there is where Gen. Odell's cunning work comes in. He and his friends will gobble the script originating from the withdrawal of those sagebrush acres and sell it at something of a profit to be laid on our good timber land west of the Cascades. There may not be fraud, but one may properly speculate on the number of shovels of mineral earth that exists on those arid plains in Malheur County.

DANISH WEST INDIES

A few weeks ago the treaty ceding the Danish West Indies to the United States was rejected by the legislature of Denmark. A French paper, 'Journal des Deuts', sees cause to justify the little European power to take fright. It says: "Has Denmark taken into consideration what took place between the United States and Spain and what may take place, of a similar character, in the future? Might Denmark not have ended the possibility of serious complications to come by voluntarily eliminating the source whence they may spring? No doubt the answer could be made that other nations, like France and Great Britain, own some of the Antilles and that they have determined to retain them. But France and Great Britain are powerful nations to which provocation would not be given over a trifle and which would be capable, moreover, of defending themselves. Nothing of this sort is true of little Denmark, which runs great risk of finding herself some day as helpless against the United States as Spain was, nor could she hope to receive any more support from the Powers of Europe than Spain received."

The French paper is not familiar with the temper of the American people. Spain was not jumped upon because there were outlying Colonies near our Coast; nor because she was a weak nation. Indeed there was those in the early part of 1898 that did not hesitate to say that we would get whipped, certainly during the earlier stages of the war. European fleets would easily annihilate our ships. Though some admitted that our resources would in a long struggle give us the advantage. We did not covet Spain's Colonies, for after defeating the dons and taking Cuba, the Pearl, we did not keep it. It was Spain's own folly that lost to her what she owned in America. Humane treatment of her subjects even though a considerable part of them were in rebellion would have prevented our interferences.

So if Denmark will give her American islands a proper government, treat the people as they deserve to be treated, the United States will never interfere. We have possessions unoccupied far more valuable than the barren rocks of St. John and St. Thomas. We do not and will not covet those dots in the ocean till Denmark again puts them on the market. Then we will take them or require Denmark to keep them. Indeed it was the rumor that Denmark was about to, or had opened negotiations with an European nation that caused us to hasten to get them last year. We want no European nation planted at the gate to the open sea from the Isthmian Canal.

No, the rejection by Denmark of the treaty of annexation will not make an enemy.

TARIFF REVISION.

Answering the question, "What is the outlook for tariff revision at this session of Congress?" put to Congressman Tongue of the First Oregon District by an Oregonian reporter on Tuesday evening last that gentleman gave this very lucid analysis of the matter:

"It would be impossible to revise the tariff or to consider tariff revision at this short session. It is too big a subject, and will occupy too much time. Whenever it is taken up it means a very vigorous conflict. The East will demand a reduction of the duty on food products, lumber, wool, hides, coal, etc. The West, on the other hand, which produces these things, will oppose reduction on that line, and will insist on a reduction on that class of manufactured products that is competing in foreign countries with the productions of those countries, and that is selling cheaper there than at home, and that could withstand all foreign competition without the present tariff. In other words, the East wants relief from high-priced food, clothing and building materials, while on the other hand, the West wants relief from the exactions of the large manufacturing trusts. A subject involving controversies of this nature and that must be adjusted in committee before the bill comes on the floor of the House must necessarily be deferred either to a special session or the next regular session."

"What do you think of the proposal to have the whole matter threshed out by a tariff commission?" Mr. Tongue replied by asking another question: "Do you think it is probable that you could get a more representative body of men than the ways and means committee of the House and the finance committee of the Senate to act as a tariff commission?"

RECOGNITION OF THE UNION The Anthracite Arbitration Committee has finished the mine inspection and now is taking testimony. President Mitchell is the first witness and he has been on the stand for three or four days. From the drift of the cross examination the operators are prepared to concede every claim of the mines save one; recognition of the Union. They declare they never had any purpose of submitting that question to arbitration, and give their reasons clearly and emphatically why they cannot and will not recognize the union. They declare they will not discriminate against union men; but non-union men shall be employed on the same terms. They claim the right to employ and to discharge whom they please, and will deal directly with their own employees who claim any grievance, but they will not permit the intervention of the union.

If the miners remain equally stubborn, the strike will again be taken up. But the action taken thus far will give non-union men more confidence and they will more freely take the place of the strikers so that there is hope that public interests will not be jeopardized as before the appointment of the Commission. A list of 2,000 names of non-union men was presented to the committee. These men ask to be heard through their attorney.

Discussing the recognition of the Union, the Corvallis Gazette arrives at what seems a tenable conclusion by this course of reasoning: "Upon this one point law, custom and inherent right are with the mine owners. It is an inherent right that employers may employ whom they will, that men shall control and conduct their business as they will so long as they do not infringe upon the rights of others. It is the inherent right of the individual to work upon such terms as he may be willing to accept."

The operators stand upon this right both for themselves and for non-union miners. The union is legally a nonentity, yet it insists that only its members shall be employed and contracts, agreements and conditions under which the mines shall be operated must be concluded with the officers of the union. It uses all the means in its power, resorting to force and violence to compel men to enter the union, and this in spite of the fact that hundreds of men have conscientious, religious scruples against membership in any such organization.

"The operators do not deny the right of the miners to form organizations. No one denies them this right, but membership must be voluntary. Forcible membership is in direct violation of the individual's right of free choice. Here then is the main contention and the conditions on which it rests. It is perfectly plain that the commission cannot settle this even if it should make an effort to do so. Were the mass of miners intelligent American citizens a solution of the difference would be reached within the space of right, but they are not such citizens. They have shown a total disregard of law and right and until they respect these they must not claim equity. "He who claims equity must do equity."

In his recent New York speech at the banquet of the Chamber of Commerce President Roosevelt speaks of the American attitude of friendly good-will toward weaker nations and of gratification over the prosperity of all countries. The President favors preparedness, especially as regards the navy, "not because we want war, but because we desire to stand with those whose plea for peace is listened to with respectful attention." But the main text of the President's address is the subject of industrial troubles and he urges that peace at home, "which can be obtained in society only when in various relations employer and employed alike show no merely instance each upon his own rights, but also regard for the rights of others, and a full acknowledgment of the interests of the third party—the public." The argument for mutual consideration instead of industrial war was dispassionate, earnest and manly.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE. The largest sum ever paid for a prescription, changed hands in San Francisco, Aug. 30, 1901. The transfer involved in coin and stock $11,000.00 and was paid by a party of business men for a specific for Bright's Disease an 1-4-bates, lithic acid, uric acid, etc. They commenced their own investigation of the specific Nov. 15, 1901. They interviewed scores of the cured and tried it out on its merits by putting over three dozen cases on the treatment and watching them. They also got physicians to name chronic, incurable cases, and administered it with the physicians for judges. Up to Aug. 5, eighty-seven per cent of the test cases were either well or progressing favorably. There being but thirteen per cent of failures, the parties were satisfied and closed the transaction. The proceedings of the investigating committee and the clinical reports of the test cases were published and will be mailed free on application. Address JOHN J.
