A Memorial Day Story

By ROBERT C. V. NEYERS

There was a little girl about six years old who was a frequent attendant of the meetings of the Hillside School. Her name was Miss Carolina, and she was a very pretty little girl, with large brown eyes and a sweet little face. She was always dressed in the best clothes, and she was very much liked by the other children.

One day, when the school was in session, the principal announced that a little girl had been killed in an accident, and that a memorial service would be held in her memory.

The little girl's name was Miss Carolina, and she was a very pretty little girl, with large brown eyes and a sweet little face. She was always dressed in the best clothes, and she was very much liked by the other children.

The principal announced that a memorial service would be held in her memory, and the children all gathered around to listen. Miss Carolina was very popular, and everyone was sad to think that she would be remembered in this way.

The service was held in the school auditorium, and the principal gave a brief speech in her memory. Then the children sang a song, and then the service was over.

The little girl had been killed in an accident, and she was going to be remembered in this way for many years to come. Everyone was sad to think that she would be remembered in this way, but they knew that she would be safe in heaven, and that she would be happy there.
