AN EXTRA SESSION NEEDED.

The needs of road and school districts of Washington county, of our five municipal corporations and of the county government itself all demand a special session of the Legislature to remedy the defect in the tax law. That same necessity exists in practically every part of the state of Oregon and Governor Chamberlain will not require very acute hearing to learn the wishes of the people.

It is to be hoped however that the Governor will not carry out his expressed intention of calling the session for the week before Christmas. The great drawback to the last session was haste, legislators were too much interested in the noon roll call, the evening caucus and the all-day discussion of the senatorial contest to take time for legislation. To summon them away from their homes the week before the great family festival is to invite another ill-considered and defective law. Far better would it be to have the legislature take its full twenty days and give careful and undivided attention to lawmaking. Then the advocates of election of United States senators by direct vote of the people would have opportunity to judge the validity of their principal argument, that the removal of the contest from the legislature would result in improved legislation. A session of the legislature in itself ought not to be dreaded like threatened highwater or the imminence of forest fires, a calamity to be if possible averted. If the legislative branch of the government is so dangerous, abolish it, but while our state constitution provides such a power give it a chance to perform its constitutional duties. The extra session ought to be called to meet as early as possible.

EVERY TEACHER THE DISTRICT'S DOCTOR.

Of curious interest is that recent bulletin of the State Board of Health on "School Children and how to guard their health," interesting as a curiosity, but the "ideal" state of affairs at which the author, Dr. Woods Hutchinson, experienced in cattle inspection, aims is not likely to be realized on this side of the grave and probably won't be needed on the other. States bread disease, the school lunch is deadly, lead pencils are "less lieble than slate pencils" to do bodily injury by going up noses and into ears, are a few of the hunks of wisdom handed out to the teachers of the state. A school physician is suggested as a valuable addition to the district payroll, to make daily inspection and draw a salary. Also teachers are given a fifteen minutes course in diagnosis, the writer sagely observing that most of the stupidity of children arises from defects in hearing seeing tasting, smelling and feeling, or thinking.

A thermometer also is to be provided in each school, not the kind that hangs by a string in the center of the room to keep the temperature at 68F. but one which is put under the pupil's tongue to tell if its eruptions are contagious ("It" is Dr. Woods Hutchinson's personal pronoun relating to children). The public drinking cup which the child puts to his lips is to be abolished also, gether because of the five or six acute contagious diseases and the two chronic diseases which it communicates, but the thermometer which through the day is soaked in the saliva of the entire school has no safe guards thrown around it. Cleanliness is taught by individual towels, renewed each week or each month as the teacher may deem best, and by that same regard the doctor stands revealed as one who acquired his early notions of towels in a printing office.

Such is the circular, another lot of white paper spoiled with impossible ideas or how to make the miniature school world that Utopia which can never be realized in its larger counterpart. What is good in the bulletin is not new, the experienced eye of the teacher has not needed a tongue thermometer to detect fever flash in a pupil's features, the dinnerpail fed country scholar is a healthier specimen than the average student in the city who goes home for lunch, so one might follow out each material allegation in Dr. Hutchinson's treatise. Doubtless "School children and how to guard their health" will be welcomed by the medical fraternity of the state, among the school teachers it is not likely to awake any great enthusiasm.
