* * * "But the question of whether or not women need the ballot, or whether they would improve conditions if they had the ballot is not the point. The question is, have they a right to the ballot? Should persons who are governed by laws have a voice in making those laws? Those are the only pertinent questions to be considered in the discussion of woman suffrage. All others are merely side issues advanced for the purpose of clouding the main issue."—Milton Eagle.

The postoffice department has resolved to enforce its decision in regard to the publication of names of winners in social card games, and it is also held that advertising guessing contests and contests for prizes and sight-seeing trips in the newspapers is against the rules of the postoffice department, and papers doing so are liable to be barred from the mails. In some states the newspapers have been apprised of the matter by postmasters and the editors have asked the intervention of their congressmen.

A newspaper in Des Moines wired the department at Washington asking if it was against rules to note the fact that Mrs. So and So had won a cut glass pitcher and Mr. So and So had won a beautiful card case at Mrs. So and So's card party, and a reply came back that it was, and that papers publishing the names of winners in any contest, or an announcement of the contest, would be excluded from the mails.
