

Education and Reading.

We are anxious, conscientiously anxious, in these days to know what the workman and his family read. Being told that three workmen out of four read sporting papers exclusively and that but one wife in four reads at all, and then only cheap fiction papers, social theorists conclude that the problems of morals and of poverty are involved right there. With the spread of education, we are told, the working classes will read something better than reading. But do men and women who have been "educated" in the conventional way make a better showing in their reading than the crowd in the cities of toilers? Education and prosperity are believed to go hand in hand, but if the argument is valid then the prosperous element should be reading something better than the crowd. The fact is, however, that men of business, lawyers, doctors, men in public life, read about the same things as the workman—that is, the papers and novels. And the women in the same circle, as a rule, have "no time to read." The workman's wife thinks it an economic sin to sit down with a book, and the woman in the mansion thinks it a social sin. In the case of the latter her company or her club or her church or charity duties would have to wait on the latest novel. In both cases the excuse is that there are more important things in life than reading.

Reading has been called "the night-gown of sloth." To read merely for the sake of reading would naturally breed laziness, and if recreation, stimulus, change of thought, can be secured as effectively or even more effectively in some other way than by reading, some way broadening to existence, it might prove profitable where reading would be the reverse. Education makes people think, but there are opiates set up in type that puts thought to sleep. The important thing, then, in reading is not the shape or size of the printed sheet, whether newspaper or book, but what it is about.

The Rod and Bad Boys.

A chief of police in a certain suburb of Chicago said recently that "the de-cence of the slapper" is primarily responsible for the crop of bad boys that are making trouble for the officers who enforce the law. This is a new way of putting the old proverb that sparing the rod is spoiling the child. There used to be boys mischievous enough to deserve a licking now and then and many enough to come to the scratch at settling time, own up and take their medicine. The strap or the rod or the slapper was kept handy, and every offense had its penalty. Occasionally a conscientious father or mother got in the lickings periodically on general principles and had their offspring call them blessed for doing it faithfully after they had grown up.

Humanitarian ideas have banished the rod from our newer pedagogical system, and perhaps that is as it should be. Lickings by strangers may run into partiality and even into cruelty and fail to impress the youth with the justice of discipline. But the lash is permitted in the home, and it is the natural duty of the parent both to the child and to society to start the young-ster on the good old road of recognizing authority. Tracts and copy books impress upon young minds the importance of learning to say "No." Many of them should be taught to say "May I?" at an earlier stage of development.

The majority of people take a meal of some kind between the hours of 12 and 2 daily, says a physician. With a number of persons this meal assumes the form of a substantial dinner, while with others it amounts to nothing more than a light luncheon. In either case, however, the repast requires to be digested, and this necessitates some modification of the activities of the brain, since neither that organ nor those concerned in the processes of digestion are capable of good work when an attempt is made to put forth their energies simultaneously.

The exceedingly complex processes of digestion and assimilation whereby dead animal and vegetable matters are transformed into living human tissues demand for their rapid and healthy performance an increased circulation of blood in the stomach and ancillary organs as well as a concentration of nervous energy in the same region. Now, increase of circulation in one organ or set of organs entails a diminution in the others. Consequently the supply of blood to the brain is curtailed immediately after a meal has been eaten, and since the blood is the life higher functions of that great organ are performed only with difficulty if at all.

A tendency to drowsiness, confusion of thought and inability to make any great mental effort are among the results of a diminished cerebral circulation. These feelings are, therefore, experienced by most persons after a meal, and they are the more pronounced in proportion to the greater amount of digestive energy expended.

Since brain work of good quality cannot be produced while the processes of digestion are in active operation it is wise not to attempt it. It is never prudent to thwart the beneficent intentions of nature. Many persons struggle against the mental and physical lethargy that accompany the earlier stages of the digestive act, apparently under the delusion that all time given to the important business of building up and repairing their tissues is time wasted. So far from this being the case, a well spent postprandial interval tends to the preservation and prolongation of life.

If a tendency to drowsiness is felt sleep should be allowed to prevail, for the proverbial "forty winks" is justified by science. A ten or fifteen minutes' nap after a meal, curiously enough, will enable many a brain worker to arise refreshed who might have spent an hour or two in a vain and mentally confused struggle against the "drowsy god." A cup of tea or coffee about an hour after a light luncheon will facilitate and expedite the last stages of gastric digestion and so assist in the rapid re-establishment of mental vigor and clearness of mind.

There are some persons who instead of resting after luncheon or early dinner take some form of exercise, such as walking or cycling. If the meal has been at all substantial muscular exercise must tend to retard and weaken digestion by withdrawing a certain medium of nerve energy to the lower limbs and the centers which govern their movements and diminishing the circulation in the alimentary canal by increasing it in the legs and arms.

On many grounds rest after food is more in accordance with physiological requirements than exercise, and the afternoon nap, so scoffed at by the heedless, is a measure to be not only defended but recommended. It is a practice beneficial not only to digestion, but to many of the other functions of the body. Rest is the one thing useful in this restless age, and it is never so necessary as in the small hours of the afternoon.

Among the many generally unsuspected benefits conferred on the post meridian sleeper rest of the heart and systemic circulation must be placed in the front rank. Now, the more rest within the limits of health, the heart is able to obtain the more efficiently and the longer will it continue to carry on its work, for the heart is, with most people, a much overworked organ, and any indulgence given it will be repaid several times over.

Another very important organ which obtains a much needed rest during the afternoon nap is the eye. There is no reason why people should be constantly laying waste the powers of the organ of vision, the optic nerve and the visual centers of the brain itself by continual gazing at whatever trivial objects chance to present themselves within the field of vision.

Even the most casual of "things seen" entails an expenditure of nerve energy, and an adjustment of accommodation, wear and tear of the exceedingly fine and complex ocular mechanism and a corresponding exhaustion of the nerve cells constituting the visual centers of the brain, all of which must tend ultimately to curtail the period during which the visual sense should be at its best.—London Chronicle.

It only needs a mere touch of the treadle to start the machine. The use of ball-bearings, the superior design and mechanical excellence of construction throughout, all combine to make its continuous operation a pleasure—it runs so smoothly.
The new BOBBIN EJECTOR is a marvel of ingenuity. No more annoyance—no trouble. A simple pressure of the finger on ejector instantly LIFTS THE BOBBIN within easy reach.
Of its many valuable and unique features, The AUTOMATIC TENSION RELEASER commands notice. It is a veritable boon. Raising the presser-foot automatically releases the thread tension and allows the work to be FREELY WITHDRAWN—no breaking of needles possible. Depressing it instantly restores correct tension.
The ATTACHMENTS furnished with this machine are so conveniently arranged in the center locking drawer—A SEPARATE PLACE FOR EACH—as to be easily accessible. There is a full set, comprising the latest and best designs.
