MRS. SNYDER

TELLS HER STORY

NOT ENOUGH TO CONVICT

Perry and Rogers—Snyder, Sr., Killed in Automobile Accident Last Saturday.

Mrs. Carey M. Snyder was in Hillsboro all day Saturday, summoned here on a subpoena, and in consultation with Deputy District Attorney Tongue until the afternoon train, when she went to Portland. In the evening she granted an interview with an Oregonian reporter, which follows, and is probably the truth about the mystery surrounding the death of her husband, so far as she knows.

The news of the death of her husband's father in an automobile accident at Kansas City, reached her while talking with the reporter. It seems that she has about as much trouble as one woman can bear, but she is holding up bravely through them all. Her first husband was killed by her own brother, her second husband was murdered near Glencoe, and now comes the news of the death in an automobile accident of R. M. Snyder, Carey Snyder's father. The Oregonian of Sunday morning contained the following:

Admitting the connection of her murdered husband, Carey M. Snyder, with the plot to rob the Forest Grove bank and with other crimes, projected, but never carried out, Mrs. Madge Snyder Saturday night told what she asserts to be all the circumstances so far as she knows them.

Surrounding the sensational Washington county murder, which the officers of the law have been probing for months past, she declared that George Perry and a man named Rodgers robbed the bank and that her husband had planned to take a hand in the crime, although the others did the job without him, and afterwards killed him because of his knowledge of the affair.

For weeks Mrs. Snyder has positively refused to say anything which would link her husband's name with the bank robbery, or any other crime, but she now freely admits his connection with it. Her changed attitude she attributes to the action of R. M. Snyder, her father-in-law, who was accidentally killed in Kansas City yesterday.

"I refuse to connect my husband with the robbery," she said last night at the Hotel Portland, "because R. M. Snyder asked me to say nothing which would put a stigma on the Snyder name. While writing me letters to show the officials, in which he told me to tell everything, he also sent me private letters, asking me to keep Carey's name out of it. I did so, thinking he was acting in good faith toward me, but I found later that he had written to the officials telling them to investigate my relations with George Perry. This was prompted by newspaper clippings, implying that my relations were not what they should be. I sent him the clippings myself, but he thought they came from the officials.

"My husband was to have robbed the bank in company with a man named Rogers, who came out here from Kansas City at his request. He told me that Rogers was an expert safe-breaker, but that he had never been detected in any crime. Perry was also in the plan to rob the bank, but my husband had a disagreement with them, and the other two. My husband's falling out with Perry and Rogers was due to his refusal to participate in holding up the box office of the Heilig Theatre, then called the Belasco. This job was to have been done on the Tuesday preceding the bank robbery, but when my husband was called up on the telephone from Portland he refused to go down and participate in the robbery of the theater. I do not know why he refused, but I do know that the other men were angry because of it.

"Previously the three men had planned to rob Dan Marx' jewelry store in Portland, and they tried to induce me to take a part by carrying away the plunder, saying that I would not be suspected, but that a man carrying satchels of plunder would be apprehended. They had intended to murder the clerk in order to rob this store.

"The bank was to have been robbed Wednesday night. Carey rode away from home on horseback that night and did not return until nearly morning. He was furious because the other men had failed to meet him. The bank was robbed the following Friday.

"When my husband learned, three days later, of the robbery, he said that the other men had done it without him and swore that they must divide. 'I am going to Portland to find Perry,' he said. 'When I get him he will have to give me a share of the money, and if he refuses to do so either he will go down and out or I shall.' He then left and that was the last I ever saw of him. It is evident that he was the one to go down and out.

"I am of the opinion that after my husband came to Portland he drove out with Perry and Rogers to a spot where the money was supposed to be concealed. He was told, I have no doubt, that he was to be given a share of the plunder. When they arrived at the spot he was murdered in cold blood and his body carried to the place where it was recently found."

The story told by Mrs. Snyder last night is practically the same as that she related to Deputy District Attorney Tongue and a court stenographer earlier in the day. It is asserted that this statement supplies the necessary link in the evidence which the officials already have, and will form a basis for issuing a warrant for the arrest of Perry.

This would probably have been done last evening had District Attorney Allen not been absent from Hillsboro. As it is a warrant will probably be issued within a few days, and in the meantime officials in the East will keep track of Perry.

It is said that the officials have no knowledge of the identity of Rogers other than what they have gained from Mrs. Snyder. However, they have known of his alleged connection with the affair for some time, and have found that he received his mail at the Cornelius postoffice during the period preceding the Forest Grove robbery.

In her confession to the officials Mrs. Snyder told of the hiding of a quantity of dynamite near her home, the explosive having been intended for use in the bank robbery.

"I think it was dynamite," she said last night. "It was some kind of explosive with fuses. The officials have asked me to go with them to the place where it is buried. I will remain here for some time, but I do not believe that I can remember where I buried it."

Mrs. Snyder expressed sorrow when she was told of the death of R. M. Snyder.

"My God, it seems that troubles will never cease," she exclaimed. "I do not know that I would have told all that I have today if I had known of this. It is awful to have all this about Carey and the account of his father's death printed on the same day.

"But then I cannot help but feel this way about it," she concluded. "R. M. Snyder would probably never have been killed if he had come to Oregon and helped investigate the murder of Carey."

In her story Mrs. Snyder told of much harsh treatment at her husband's hands. She said that he beat her repeatedly because she refused to join with him in the crimes he planned, and that he kicked her and struck her in the face.

Her unwillingness to mention his name in connection with the crimes, she asserted, was entirely in deference to her father-in-law.

IS PLANNED

FOR PORTLAND

FIRST ON THE PACIFIC COAST

A Plant for the Manufacture of Denatured Alcohol is to Go in at Portland.

The first denatured alcohol plant on the Coast is to be erected just outside of Portland shortly after the first of next year, when the law passed by the last session of congress removing the duty on alcohol, goes into effect.

The plant is to be located on the 400-acre ranch owned by Dr. C. W. Cornelius, on the Peninsula, between Columbia river and Columbia slough. Dr. Cornelius has just disposed of the whole ranch to the company, which is to be known as the Pacific Alco Fuel Company, a stock concern, which has been incorporated under the laws of Oregon with a capitalization of $150,000. It is backed by Eastern capital. The incorporators, however, are all local people, as follows: J. B. Laber, secretary of the Board of Trade; Attorney Alex Sweek and J. M. Lay. The plant will cost in the neighborhood of $50,000, the remainder of the purchase price of the land and the working capital.

According to the prospectus of the company, which has just been prepared, the purpose of the company is to manufacture and sell "denatured and denaturalized alcohol, for use as fuel, light and power."

The important considerations which led to the selection of the Cornelius farm for the site are that the plant will be near the required quantities of raw material, and where they are best and cheapest, where there is a market for all the alcohol that can be made, where gasoline and kerosene sell for highest prices. The plant will be on the water front, where the raw material can be gathered and the finished product marketed daily by the company's line of boats. The company also plans to go into the hog-raising industry, and will fatten the porkers on the vegetable refuse from the plant.

Of the 400 acres in the ranch, it is expected that 350 acres will be planted in potatoes, which are used in the manufacture of the denatured product. As a side issue, a considerable portion of the tract will be devoted to sugar-beet culture, a product which will grow admirably, it is said, in the slough lands along the Columbia river bottoms. It is estimated that the potatoes will yield from 500 to 600 bushels to the acre and the sugar beets from 30 to 40 tons.

Assurance has been received from farmers and small ranchowners and fruitgrowers along the river that they would supply the concern with raw material, such as potatoes, sugar beets and fruits, in quantities sufficient for all needs of the industry. The concern has also arranged for the construction of scows and tugs for hauling the raw product from the producers to the plant.

The capacity of the original plant as now contemplated is estimated at 100 barrels of fuel alcohol a day, at a cost of 75 cents a barrel. The plant will be enlarged as the industry increases.

As for a market, it is believed by the promoters that the whole output of the plant may be disposed of in Portland, as a substitute for gasoline as fuel for yachts, lamps, stoves, automobiles, cars, small pumping engines, etc. As a fuel it is said to be clean and odorless, and much less dangerous than gasoline and kerosene, and it may be used largely in the household as well as in the arts.—Portland Telegram.

It developed in the trial of John Cain, who stole a reed organ in Jefferson county Indiana, and hauled it seventy-five miles to Shelbyville, where he sold it for $8, that Cain once stole a cow and put boots on her feet to prevent its being traced. The authorities were baffled in their search for the stolen cow by seeing nothing but men's tracks. Cain took to the stable two pairs of men's boots, which he put upon the cow's feet by lifting her hoofs and jamming them down into the boots. Then he tied the upper parts securely about her fetlocks and drove her away.
