Wherever the woman goes a "shadower" clings to her heels. If she enters a restaurant he takes up his position at some favorable point of vantage until she emerges, and then follows her again. If she goes to a theatre, the same thing occurs. Let her take the train for Hillsboro, or a streetcar, and she soon becomes aware that the "shadower" accompanies her. This has given rise to the startling theory that one of the suspects in the robbery and murder case is even now in Portland or vicinity, and has employed persons to watch the woman's move-

George Perry, cousin of the murdered man, is in Missouri. But the man known to Mrs. Snyder only, as Rogers, who is accused of assisting Perry in "blowing" the bank at Forest Grove, and is under suspicion of being a party to Carey Snyder's murder, might take up his abode in Portland with small chance of detention. He or his agents, the prosecution lance on the movements of the widow and her friends. The identity of Rogers is unknown. All the data in possession of the authorities is that he is a young man, of about Notice is hereby given that I have der, an expert safe cracksman and newly married. Saturday evening Mrs. Snyder took a meal at a Washington street restaurant with a friend. They were followed from the restaurant to the parlors of the Portland Hotel. When the friend left the hotel a short time afterward he was followed to his own appartments. The same is true in the case of a woman who has spent some time recently with Mrs.

An incident which the officials believe is closely related to the "shadowing" of the woman took place Sunday night in a North End saloon. A man who appeared to be intoxicated paced noisily up and down in front of the bar while discussing the Snyder murder case, and several times asserted loudly:

"I know all about this affair. I'm the only man in Portland that does. The woman killed him herself and I can

The officials are firmly convinced that the fellow was associated in the crime with the men already under suspicion or was "stalling" to divert suspicion toward Mrs. Snyder for a price. At the proper time the man who did the talking is to be taken into custody and subjected to a earching examination.
